Hein-Stavros tie told in lawsuit

Story written by Lynn Asinof with research by Toni Ginnetti and Linda Punch.

Former Wheeling Police Chief Peter Guttilla was hand-picked for that top law enofrcement job in 1972 in a clandestine meeting with Village Pres. William Hein and convicted extortionist James Stavros.

Guttilla's testimony in a deposition filed in U.S. District court this week is the first direct link tying Hein, then a trustee, with political strongman Stavros.

The testimony shows that Hein helped Stavros fill at least one key village post at a time when the local government was riddled with corruption.

Hein, who repeatedly has denied political connections with Stavros, Friday refused to comment, saying the matter is in court. "I don't want anything to jeopardize the case," he said of Guttilla's suit to get his old job back.

HEIN'S CONNECTION WITH Stavros has continued to be a political issue in Wheeling. Stavros appeared at Hein's vcitory party after Hein's slate swept the April village election. His opponents on the board also have charged that Hein has been seen meeting with Stavros at the Hein family auto parts store. Hein consistently has denied these charges.

Guttilla testified that Stavros arranged a meeting with Hein and two other village officials in May 1972, a the old Hartmann House restaurant, 393 S. Milwaukee Ave.

One of those attending the meeting was the late village Trustee Michael Valenza, who was convicted with Stavros in 1974 in building and zoning scandal. Guttilla said he could not remember the third official.

Stavros, former Wheeling Township Democratic committeeman, had no official position in the village. During his sentencing, however, he admitted that he controlled village building and zoning policies, allowing him to shakedown numerous builders.

Describing Hein as "the aggressor in the conversation," Guttilla said Hein and Valenza offered him the police chief's job. Guttilla said he was not interested in the post until the two promised him a four-year contract, an $18,000 annual salary and a substantial raise in the future.

ALTHOUGH STAVROS arranged the initial meeting, he was not included in a subsequent meeting.

"Jim kind of made the initial introduction and then backed away from everything and left it to the trustees," Guttilla said.

The police chief's post was open because chief M. O. Horcher suffered a stroke and was placed on disability. Guttilla became acting chief and captain in June 1972, hired by then Village Mgr. George Passolt. Horcher became an administrative assistant.

Three years later, Horcher was judged fit to resume his post and ousted Guttilla, who promptly filed suit. Guttilla still is unemployed.

IN HIS DEPOSITION, filed in connection with his suit, Guttilla also admitted that Stavros politically sponsored him for two earlier jobs. One job was as an investigator for Cook County Board Pres. Seymour Simon from 1964-66. The second job in early 1968 was as an investigator for then Illinois Sec. of State Paul Powell.

Describing his hiring, Guttilla said there were a total of three meetings, the first arranged by a phone call from Stavros.

Guttilla said he arrived at the restaurant and Stavros introduced him to Valenza, Hein and the third official. "Then he left the saloon," he said of Stavros. "He left me alone with the

More secret drugging told by the CIA

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The CIA Friday disclosed it had arranged the secret drugging of more American citizens in the cold war era than it previously admitted to Congress.

White House Press Sec. Jody Powell said CIA Director Stansfield Turner had unearthed documents concerning the druggings in the period from 1953-1964, and passed the information both to the White House and Sen. Daniel K. Inouye, D-Hawaii, chairman of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence.

Powell said the CIA did not know of any deaths in the series of experiments, which he said were discontinued more than 10 years ago.

ACCORDING TO testimony to the Senate Intelligence Committee in 1975, an Army biochemist committed suicide after being fed LSD in a series of CIA-Army experiments which also involved prison "volunteers" and inmates at the Lexington, Ky., center for narcotic addicts in the 1950s.

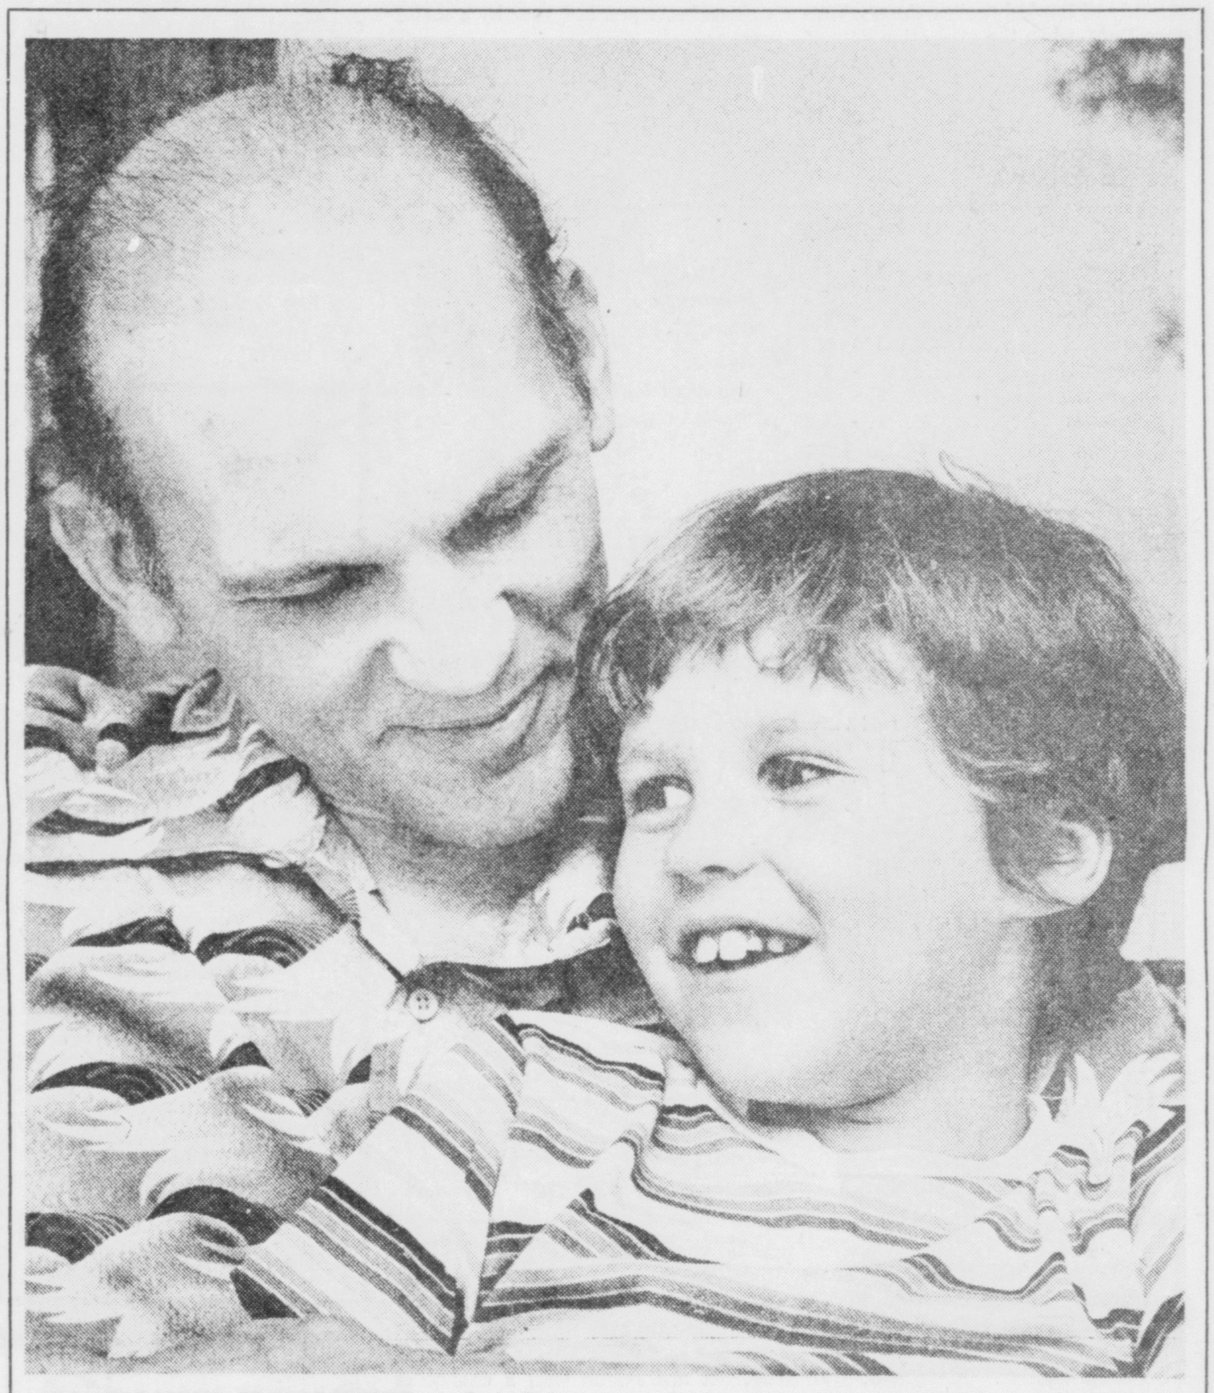
Powell said the new documents found by Turner revealed some persons chosen for experimentation under the so-called "MK-ULTRA" program were drug addicts or alcoholics, and there was research on surreptitious methods of administering drugs.

According to previous disclosures, Frank Olson leaped out a New York hotel window in 1953 in a suicide plunge while under the influence of drugs secretly administered by the CIA.

"So far as I know, the CIA doesn't know" of any deaths in the cases disclosed Friday, Powell said.

TURNER SAID the new material was "primarily of a financial nature." He said there wre these types of activities:

- Possible additional cases of drugs being tested on American citizens without their knowledge.
- Research was undertaken on surreptitious methods of administering drugs.
- Some of the persons chosen for erxperimentation were drug addicts or alcoholics.
- Research into the development of a knockout or 'K' drug was performed in conjunction with work done to develop painkillers for advanced cancer patients, and tests on such patients were carried out.
- There is a possibility of an improper payment to a private institution."



DR. ZYGMUNT BEJNAROWICZ, a Park Ridge dental surgeon, faces a legal battle in Cook County Divorce Court to maintain custody of his son Wojciech. Bejnarowicz engineered a cloak-and- dagger type mission that took 5½ years before he found his son, who was taken to England during divorce and custody hearings in Chicago in 1971.

Kids just being kids? Or dangerous rowdies?

by BILL HILL

What one of his neighbors on S. Mitchell Ave. in Arlington Heights describes as "fairly typical behavior" for teen-age boys, Ervin Peters abhors.

He is tired, he says, of having the narrow residential street blocked by kids in cars who stop to talk to each other.

He also will not ignore youths who cuss at his wife when she and friends are sitting in lawn chairs in their driveway.

AND THE FIRECRACKERS, drag racing and beer drinking obviously are illegal, Peters says.

So when these things happen, he calls the police. The results have been further harassment and intimidation for his family.

"They're like bats. They come out at night and do all sorts of dirty work," Peters said.

"We are their target now because they think we're the only ones calling the police, but we're not," he said.

Thursday night two youths who lit large firecrackers in a vacant lot next to Peters' house, 1106 S. Mitchell Ave., got more than they bargained for. Almost as soon as they lit the oversized firecrackers they were being chased by Patrolman Charles Waite who was waiting for them in Peters' house.

THEY RAN TO a friend's car one block away and escaped Waite's grasp but were arrested a short time

Tug o' war with child's life

Since last November 6-year-old Wojciech Bejnarowicz has been discovering what it is like to be a normal, middle class child in the United States.

He goes to school. He plays with neighbor children in a small pool in back of his northwest Chicago home. He takes swimming lessons at the YMCA. He listens to bedtime stories from his father.

It is a childhood that Wojciech was sheltered from for 5½ years, until his father, Dr. Zygmunt Bejnarowicz, last November snatched him from his mother's side as she walked down a street in London, England.

"HE WASN'T AT school, he hadn't been around any children," said Bejnarowicz, 45, a Park Ridge dental surgeon. "He wanted to be in their company but he didn't know how to start it. She (his mother) hadn't sent him to school because she was afraid we would find him."

Bejnarowicz is worried that the incredible 5½ year search and kidnaping of his son, which included the hiring of four detectives and cost $30,000, may not have been enough to rejoin him permanently with Wojciech.

The boy's mother, who defied a Chicago court order when she fled with the boy to England in 1971, is waging what Bejnarowicz calls "a fierce battle" to regain custody of Wojciech.

BEJNAROWICZ FEARS that his ex-wife's aggressive attorney, a psychologist's report and the fact that courts usually give cus-

Waiting begins for mom of surviving copter copilot

A Herald staff report

Glenn Schwanke's grandfather was 80 years old Friday and the family planned a celebration. But the plans changed suddenly in the afternoon when Glenn's mother, of Spring Green, Wis., learned he was the lone survivor from the crew of a U.S. helicopter shot down Thursday morning over North Korea.

"She'll probably just stay at home and hope for a call from the Pentagon saying her son has been released," Mrs. Nonnie Parkins, a family friend, said Friday.

Schwanke's mother learned the fate of her son about 4:30 p.m. Friday when she called Jody Powell, President Carter's press secretary.

THE SCHWANKE family and friends, however, still are concerned because they don't know the condition of Glenn, 28. The North Koreans have said he is injured but won't say how badly. Schwanke, a chief warrant officer, was the copilot of the helicopter that reportedly strayed over into North Korea before it was shot down.

Mrs. Parkins said a White House reporter was the first person to give Mrs. Schwanke the news. Not believing the reporter, she called Powell who confirmed the news.

Schwanke's father and mother are divorced. His father, who lives in nearby Loganville, has no telephone, friends say, and they were uncertain whether he knew about his son.

Pentagon officials were hoping Schwanke would be released and the bodies of the other three crewmen returned.

SCHWANKE'S AUNT, Catherine Schwanke, said she remembers he was shot down while piloting a helicopter in Vietnam. She said he may have been shot down as many as three times while on a tour of duty there.

"When I heard he had been shot down, I thought to myself that he'll know just what to do," Mrs. Schwanke said.

"I really don't think this will affect Glenn," she said. "He'll probably take it all right in stride. He is very levelheaded."

Friends said Mrs. Schwanke has held up well throughout the incident.

Schwanke, who visited his family last November when he came home to go deer hunting, had just reenlisted before he was sent to Korea.

He has been in the service nine years and had been training helicopter pilots at a base in Texas before being sent to Korea.

While in Texas he met his wife who went to Korea with him in April.

Boy returned to mother–and dies

MILWAUKEE (UPI) — Seven-year-old Francis Munoz did not want to go back to his natural parents' home. But Milwaukee County officials returned him there.

He died this week of a beating in Chicago.

His mother, Rosella Machipness, 32, has been charged with murder and is being held in the Cook County jail on $400,000 bail.

Records show that the boy was first removed from his Milwaukee home in 1974 on a judge's order. The judge had ruled that the biy was neglected.

FRANCIS STAYED in a Racine, Wis., foster home for about two years, adjusting well, reports said. A social worker wanted the boy to stay in he custody of the Milwaukee County Welfare Dept. when the expiration date of the court order approached.

Following a conference with the boy's lawyers, the department and the parents, all agreed that the boy could go back to his natural parents, who would participate in a program of the Menominee County Dept. of Social Services to make them better parents. The parents had by this time moved near Swahwano, Wis.

The family moved to Chicago in May.

The boy died Tuesday, officials said. Records show he had multiple head injuries, a chronic concussion and injuries over his entire body.

"Francis . . . has revealed fear that his mother would hurt him again," according to a report to the court written in August last year by a social worker.

Elephant latest birthday present

by United Press International

Sam Matar gave his brother John a 3,800-pound "pet rock" for his birthday last year. This year's gift was a 4,800-pound elephant.

John was sitting on the front steps of his South Side home Thursday when a truck drove up, the doors opened and out came Cathy, an Asiatic elephant, and owners Paul and Dorothy Kelly of Peru, Ind.

"I kind of figured it was mine," John said. "She's beautiful. What more can I say? Actually, the rock was a little better. I've still got it in my back yard."

It was the latest chapter in an unusual game of one-upmanship between the Matar brothers which started several years ago.

"We started sending each other insulting birthday cards each year," said Sam, an auto dealer and nightclub owner in Monterey, Calif. "Then it began escalating. I'd send about 30 cards, and he'd send 50. Finally I sent him one that was 7 feet by 3 feet. That ended the cards."

In 1974, Sam hired two beautiful girls in bikinis to deliver a birthday cake to John at Regenstein Press, where he works. John retaliated by sending Sam on his birthday, Feb. 7, three elderly ladies in swimming suits to sing "Happy Birthday."

Sam hired a plane to fly over Regenstein Press trailing a sign reading, "Happy Birthday John." Last year, he had the huge rock dumped on John's front lawn.

John got a high school band to march up and down the street outside Sam's agency for half an hour this year.

"It was chaos," said Sam. "There was a big traffic jam, and I decided, 'I'm gonna fix you, brother John.' I figured I'd get him a live pet to play with the pet rock."

John got on top of Cathy for all of 45 seconds before the elephant was led back to the truck and returned to Indiana. Sam couldn't attend the event this year, but said he will be there for sure next year.

"Just wait till you see what he's going to get," Sam said. "Just you wait."

What will John get Sam — a whole circus?

"You don't think I'm going to tell you, do you? All I'll say is, Sam's going to be sorry."

We've had our share of days in 90s

Hot and humid. High in the 90s.

That's the cutlook for the weekend following a record 99 Friday at Chicago's Midway Airport.

The National Weather Service was very cautious in promising relief, predicting only that sporadic thunderstorms could develop sometime between today and Monday.

Some showers were reported in the area Friday night.

Friday was the 25th day of 90-degree weather this year in the Chicago area. Twenty-six 90-degree days is about average for the year, said Steve Kahn of the weather service.

Friday's high set a record for a July 15, breaking the 1932 record by two degrees. The lowest reading for the same date was 52 in 1967.

An ozone advisory remained in effect for the area.

For the fourth time this month, Commonwealth Edison supplied a record amount of electrical power to the Chicago area, said Bill Harrah, of Commonwealth Edison.

Nearly 14 million kilowatts were consumed in the Chicago area between 2 and 3 p.m. Friday, he said. That broke the old record of 13.8 million kilowatts set Thursday.

Harrah said Edison can deliver more than 15 million kilowatts, though officials don't expect that limit to be reached.

"If things get tied up we can always go to other utilities for help," he said.

He said a wide-ranging power failure like the one that hit New York City Wednesday is "possible, but it ain't likely."

MR. AND MRS. MICHAEL A. BILANDIC as they leave Holy Name Cathedral, Chicago, where the mayor and his bride exchanged wedding vows Friday afternoon. (Photo by Dave Tonge)

All Chicago smiles to see Mayor Bilandic, bride wed

by DAVE IBATA

The bride wore white, the bridegroom wore gray, and everybody wore smiles Friday afternoon, when Mayor Michael Bilandic of Chicago and socialite Heather Morgan exchanged marriage vows.

Bilandic, 54, and Miss Morgan, 34, exchanged nuptial vows Friday in Holy Name Cathedral, Chicago. John Cardinal Cody officiated at the High Mass, with 400 guests from Chicago's political and business communities in attendance.

The 3,000 well-wishers who waited hours outside the cathedral under blistering 90-degree skies to see the couple cheered when Mr. and Mrs. Bilandic emerged at 5:10 p.m.

The couple paused at the top of the stairs to the brownstone cathedral on N. Wabash Avenue, and smiled for photographers. Without saying a word, they walked through a shower of rice to a waiting chauffered limousine, which whisked them away to a reception at the Glen View Club in Golf.

The 11-member wedding party and family members followed in identical black Cadillacs, led by an honor guard of four Chicago motorcycle policemen to the reception in the North suburbs.

IT WAS THE wedding of the year for Chicago; bringing together the most powerful figures in area politics and commerce.

The marriage brought together two worlds: that of Bilandic, successor to Richard J. Daley and heir to the powerful Democratic machine, and Miss Morgan, darling of N. Michigan Avenue and director of the Chicago Council on Fine Arts.

After the ceremony, Gov. James R. Thompson said, "The bride was gorgeous — and nobody wrote 'Help' on the bottom of his shoes."

Others echoes Thompson's words, describing the wedding as "gorgeous," "romantic" and "absolutely beautiful."

JUST AS enthusiastic were the uninvited guests — the thousands who, despite the heat, crowded around the church to catch a glimpse of the couple.

One elderly woman fell victim to the heat, collapsing near the steps of the cathedral while the ceremony was under way. Chicago Fire Dept. paramedics took her to the hospital.

Miss Morgan and the bridal party, dressed in Saks Fifth Avenue wedding attire, arrived at 4:05 p.m., five minutes late. Miss Morgan wore the traditional white bride's veil, dress and long train, and was escorted into the church by her father.

THE BRIDAL party followed, all dressed in flowing lavender.

The crowd did not see Bilandic until after the ceremony. Following tradition — the groom should not see the bride on the day of the wedding until the ceremony — Bilandic entered unnoticed through the church rectory.

Dorothy Milandic, 72, was among the sidewalk spectators. She said she knew the Bilandic family 40 years ago, when Michael was a boy growing up in the Chicago neighborhood of Bridgeport.

She traveled from Williams Bay, Wis., to attend the mayor's wedding, but was turned away because she lacked an invitation.

She stood on the sidewalk and steamed.

"I don't know what to do, coming all this way by bus and now this," she lamented. "Oh dear, I could weep."

"I KNEW HIS mother well," Mrs. Milandic said. "I knew Michael's family. They were all working people, a very plain family, but a very nice family. They were quiet, simple, and led an unobtrusive life, a decent family. He deserves what he's getting."

Lillian Bator, 69, of Chicago, perhaps was the most colorful spectator. She stood on the church steps, old guitar in hand and an outrageous red, white and blue hat on her head, waiting to serenade the newlyweds.

She said she wrote her own song, "Lord's Blessing," 25 years ago at another wedding.

She sang her song, which in part went, "Herald angels up above/ Mark the true love of their vows," three times in honor of the Bilandics.

No. Korea changes tone about helicopter incident

SEOUL, South Korea (UPI) — North Korea said Friday it was "compelled to fire" at an unarmed U.S. Army helicopter that strayed across the truce border, but denied any of the three Americans who died in the resulting crash was hit by gunfire.

In a conciliatory gesture that departed from past practice, the North Korean government quickly provided the identity of one surviving crewman, Chief Warrant Officer II Glenn Schwanke of Spring Green, Wis., copilot of the helicopter.

The Koreans said Schwanke was getting medical treatment but did not describe his injuries. Officials in Washington had said he was hit by North Korean gunfire.

North Korea agreed to discuss the incident today at a meeting of the Korean Military Armistice Commission in the Panmunjom truce village. The U.N. Command asked the Communists to free the wounded soldier and release the bodies of his three colleagues.

POLITICAL SOURCES in South Korea said the unusually restrained tone in messages exchanged with North Korea indicated the Communists would release Schwanke, but they were not certain if they would do so by today.

North Korea said "the unhappy incident resulted entirely from the errors of the military personnel of the U.S. side," but the Communists avoided their usual denunciations of "imperialist aggressors and warmongers."

The U.N. Command message to North Korea said the incident was "regrettable" and President Carter said in Washington he hoped to prevent a navigation mistake from "escalating into a confrontation."

The unarmed helicopter strayed into North Korean airspace and was shot down at about 10 a.m. Thursday (9 p.m. EDT Wednesday) near Kosung, about 105 miles northeast of Seoul on the eastern coast. It landed briefly, then tried to take off again when it was forced down by North Korean fire, according to South Korean troops who witnessed the incident.

The crewmen who died were identified as Chief Warrant Officer II Joseph A. Miles, 26, of Washington, Ind., the pilot; Sgt. Robert E. Wells, 22, of El Paso, Tex., crew chief; and Sgt. Robert C. Haynes, 31, of Anniston, Ala., assistant crew chief.

All were based at Camp Humphries at Pyongtaek, 15 miles south of Seoul.

Bishop hits nun's abortion stand

BURLINGTON, Vt. (UPI) — Vermont's Human Services secretary — a Roman Catholic nun — was chastized sharply and publicly by her bishop Friday for statements on abortion attributed to her.

The Most Rev. John Marshall, bishop of the Burlington diocese, also called it "a mistake" for Sister Elizabeth Candon to have taken the job running the state's biggest and most costly bureau and warned a stand in favor of abortion could lead to official sanctions by the church and her possible excommunication.

The state official was quoted recently in a newspaper article as saying she feared a U.S. Supreme Court ruling that states are not obligated to use Medicaid funds for elective abortions may be "discrimination against low-income people."

WHILE EXPRESSING personal opposition to abortion, she also was quoted as saying it "should be the decision of the woman involved and the father of the child."

Sister Elizabeth, thought to be the nation's highest-placed woman cleric in an appointive state government post, said Friday it would be "inappropriate" for her to comment until she met with the bishop.

In a front-page, open letter in this week's Vermont Catholic Tribune, the bishop said statements attributed to her in the article were "confusing, misleading and scandalous to faithful Roman Catholics throughout Vermont."

Those viewpoints, Marshall wrote, are "neither approved nor even tolerated in any manner whatsoever by the bishop of the Diocese." He cited traditional moral grounds for opposing abortions and said there is no discrimination involved if the state refuses to pay for them.

"Very briefly and to the point, Sister Elizabeth has complete freedom to make any political judgment or judgment in conscience that she wishes," he wrote.

"However," he said, "she and all our people should understand that these free-will decisions can place outside the sacramental life of the Roman Catholic Church and deprive her of her good standing as a member of a religious community in that church.

Administration backs no-fault insurance bill

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The administration told Congress Friday it strongly supports legislation setting national minimum standards for no-fault auto insurance as "a matter of national conscience."

Transportation Sec. Brock Adams, at a hearing of the Senate Transportation Committee, suggested rapid action on a bill sponsored by Sen. Warren Magnuson, D-Wash., which sets minimum levels for no-fault laws in every state.

Adams was backed by Douglas Fraser, president of the United Auto Workers, who said the UAW is "convinced beyond any doubt" the present insurance system "should finally be relegated to a museum."

FRASER SUGGESTED some revisions in the Magnuson bill but said experience in individual states had shown a no-fault system "has eliminated the inadequacies, injustices, wastefulness and chaos associted with the fault-based insurance system."

No-fault laws require automobile insurance companies to pay claims without regard to who was at fault. The system is designed to avoid the exorbitant costs of "subrogation," the legal process by which insurance companies spend months determining which company should be liable.

"This administration and the Congress have been working hard to find ways to make automobiles safer and less polluting," said Adams. "As a matter of national conscience, we must turn next to aid the automobile accident victims."

IN 16 STATES now with no-fault laws, he said, "No-fault is compensating more victims, more completely, more quickly and more equitably for their economic losses then did the tort liability system, and with less reliance on the courts and legal system."

Although Adams endorsed the Magnuson bill, he said he "would hope and expect that most states, and ultimately all states, would choose to adopt a much stronger no-fault plan."

The Magnuson bill would limit medical and rehabilitation benefit levels to $100,000. No-fault policies also would be required to reimburse the purchaser up to $12,000 in lost wages.

All states would have three years to adopt a no-fault plan at least as restrictive as the federal plan or to adopt the federal plan. States could have the option of administering the federal plan or turning that job over to the Transportation Department.

tody to the mother are factors that will work against him when the court rules July 25.

Custody of the boy will be decided on that day by Judge W. E. Peterson in Cook County Divorce Court.

Margaret Bejnarowicz, Wojciech's mother, had temporary custody of the boy when she took him to England. Her action defied a county court ruling that she not take Wojciech from the country.

THE CASE WENT to court in London in May 1971, and the British court ruled that custody of Wojciech should go to Bejnarowicz. The following day Mrs. Bejnarowicz and Wojciech disappeared, prompting the relentless search by the boy's father.

When Dr. Bejnarowicz finally caught up with his ex-wife, he plotted the abduction of his son. Bejnarowicz and two agents pulled Wojciech away from his mother and her sister just outside their London apartment. Despite a struggle by the two women, Dr. Bejnarowicz and the two men rushed Wojciech to a waiting car and sped him away.

Bejnarowicz is cautious about leaving his son alone at any time. "I am always taking him there and back, I just can't chance it at all," he said.

The doctor said his objective has been to lt him begin a normal childhood.

"I've tried to get him involved with other children, that's the main thing," he said.

Bejnarowicz said it is "amazing" how fast Wojciech related to the family. They live with his parents, Joseph and Helen Bejnarowicz, and sister Elwina.

"He talks about everything in the plural, like 'when did we build this house?,'" Bejnarowicz said. "Everything is we and ours. Once he called to me early in the morning, about five o'clock, and asked me 'Am I ours?' When I told him 'yes' he went right to sleep."

Bejnarowicz is a native of Poland. He came to the United States in 1958.

Despite the fact that his ex-wife violated a court order by taking his son from the country in 1971, Bejnarowicz is apprehensive about other evidence in the pending custody settlement.

AT THE INSISTANCE of Mrs. Bejnarowicz's attorney, Bejnarowicz and the boy were ordered to take psychiatric examinations. Bejnarowicz was referred to a psychologist who interviewed him and then recommended that custody be turned over to the mother.

Bejnarowicz said that, before the interview, the psychologist was sent a list of accusations against him by the mother. He said he was never asked about the accusations by the psychologist, but instead was given an interview that included an ink blot test.

Bejnarowicz questions the psychologist's opinion that his son is responding favorably to his father out of fear.

Bejnarowicz points to slides of himself and Wojciech taken during various times since the boy was returned to the United States as evidence the boy is happy. In most of the slides young Wojciech is smiling or laughing.

"And the shrink tells me he is doing all that out of fear," he said.

Bejnarowicz said he also is worried about the trend of courts to give custody of a child to the mother, even though he was granted legal custody of the child by the county court while he was still missing in 1972.

When he goes to divorce court July 25 — Wojciech's 7th birthday — the Polish immigrant's belief in prevailing justice will receive its ultimate test. It will determine whether his successful 5½-year search for his son was a dream come true, or simply a heartbreaking and futile ordeal.

Film crews go Downstate for series in New Salem

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (UPI) — New Salem, the rustic pioneer village just outside Springfield, will begin reliving its past next month for a six-hour television miniseries provided haggling over the movie's budget is resolved.

Called "The Awakening Land," the film is expected to be shown in three two-hour segments in January. It will star Elizabeth Montgomery, but no lead man has yet been cast.

Lucy Salenger, managing director of the Illinois Dept. of Business and Economic Development, said the New Salem site was selected over areas in Illinois and several other states because it best represents the time period of the movie, 1790-1820. A pioneer story set in the Ohio Valley, the movie will detail the growth of a town during a 30-year period.

She said the budget discussions are not unusual and expects preliminary work on the film to begin before the end of this month. The movie is being shot by Warner Bros. Studios for NBC Television.

"The major problem," she said, "was finding a site like New Salem. I offered a lot of other suggestions but they finally decided on New Salem."

BEFORE A DECISION was made to use New Salem, Mrs. Salenger said, she had offered river cities such as Cairo, Golconda and Elizabethtown in Southern Illinois.

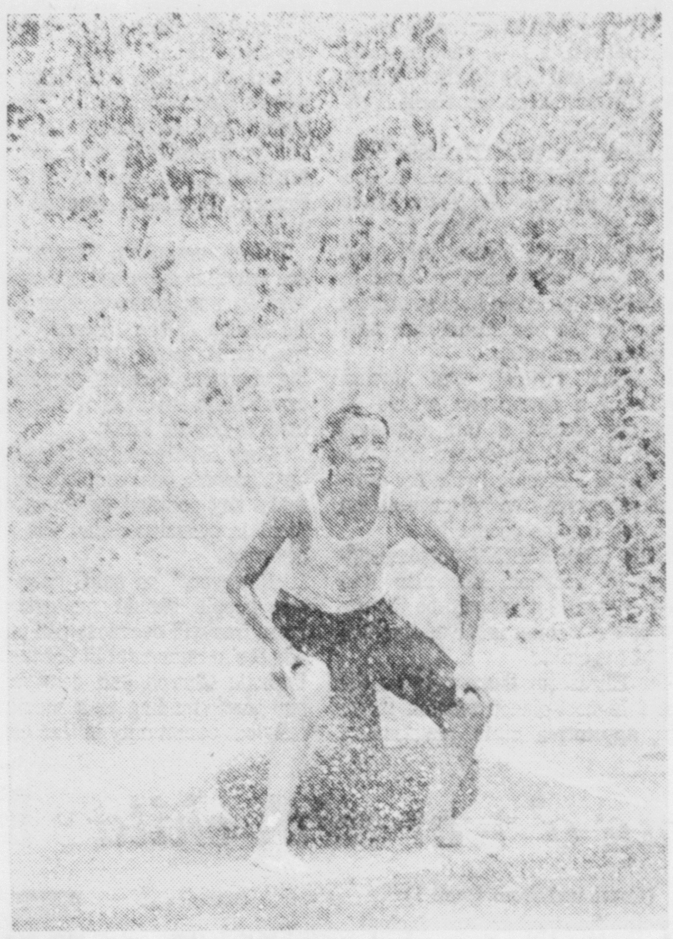
The movie will be one of the few major film projects worked on in Downstate Illinois. Part of a film about Tom Sawyer was shot in the former Mormon town of Nauvoo about three years ago and in the late 1960s "In the Heat of the Night" was filmed in Sparta.

The "New Awakening" is only one of several films being shot or to be shot in the state in the coming months. Most of the movies, such as Robert Altman's "A Wedding," are being filmed in Chicago's suburbs.

But Mrs. Salenger said her office is working with another production company to convince it to shoot a proposed motion picture in Southern Illinois near Carbondale. She said the movie would be a full-length feature but the company still is trying to raise money.

Financially, the New Salem film will bring about $1 million to the Springfield area in the way of equipment and auto rentals, hotels, food, and payment of actors, including dozens of extras from the area. More than 100 persons turned out for a casting tryout several weekends ago. Production persons conducting the interviews had not expected such a large turnout.

"It's like this brand new clean money being dropped on the town," Mrs. Salenger said.



SIT ON IT he did, and probably had a much cooler time of it than most Chicagoans. The temperature Friday reached 99 degrees, a record high for that date. The water from the hydrant only served to make the day bearable.

Mail, wire fraud arraignment set

The 11 men who allegedly operated a phoney national distributorship scheme in Des Plaines will be arraigned July 22 before U.S. District Judge Frank McGarr. The arraignment date was set Friday by U.S. District Judge John P. Crowley, sitting as emergency judge. The 11 were indicted last month, accused of mail and wire fraud and conspiracy in a million dollar scheme purporting to sell exclusive distributorships of deodorant spray products and burglar alarms. The 11 from 1972 to 1974 ran National Products Research and Development Corp. and Market Research International Corp. from two Des Plaines locations, 2720 Des Plaines Ave., and 3158 N. River Rd.

The U.S. attorney's office has charged the defendants placed ads in local newspapers throughout the country offering the distributorships for investments of $3,500 to $11,000 and promising returns of $40,000 a year. The indictments charge the 11 supplied defective products and knowingly lied to purchasers about the security of the business.

2 bet service suits dismissed

A judge Friday dismissed two more lawsuits challenging a new Illinois law against racetrack messenger betting services. U.S. District Court Judge George Leighton ruled Illinois has the right to regulate parimutuel betting under its police powers. Leighton dismissed suits filed by Pegasus Co., Chicago, the first messenger betting service set up, and T.M.S. 1, Inc., North Chicago. Leighton is the third judge to dismiss lawsuits filed in behalf of the betting services. The Illinois Appellate Court is considering appeals of two other suits, both rejected by Cook County Circuit Court judges earlier in the week.

Chevy-Olds case settlement sought

DETROIT (UPI) — The attorneys general of 38 states asked General Motors Friday to pay $500 in damages to each of 87,000 persons who unwittingly bought new Oldsmobiles, Buicks and Pontiacs equipped with Chevrolet Engines. GM Chairman Thomas Murphy said the automaker was willing to study the proposal, which could cost the world's largest auto company nearly $44 million. GM faces 123 lawsuits from states and private individuals over the enginge switch. The cars involved are equipped with the 350 cubic inch V-8 enging built by the Chevrolet Division. The engine switch controversy arose when the Oldsmobile Division short of the Rocket 350 cubic inch V-8 it builds because of high demand for larger powerplants, began installing the Chevrolet engine. Although the two engines are similar, they are not identical and many consumers complained they were not told of the change.

Genealogy 'ultimate puzzle' to woman who runs store

CAROL SCHIFFMAN, whose interest in genealogy began about 15 years ago, currently teaches genealogy courses at Harper College, Palatine. Friday, she and her family opened a store in Buffalo Grove designed to help people trace their roots.

by JOHN N. FRANK

Tracing her ancestry is the "ultimate puzzle" to Carol Schiffman of Arlington Heights.

Her 15-year quest to solve that puzzle has led her to Buffalo Grove, where she and her family this week opened a store called Genealogy Unlimited to help others trace their ancestry.

"When we moved here (1960) I had three children and I suddenly realized I didn't remember some of the stories about our family as well as I thought I did," Schiffman says.

SHE BEGAN checking on her family and eventually began teaching genealogy courses at Harper College in Palatine, and in Elgin, Streamwood and Lake Zurich.

The more she became involved in the field, the more people she found interested in finding out about their family trees.

"When I approached my first class (in 1971 at Harper) I thought people were interested to join some lineage society like the Daughters of the American Revolution," Mrs. Schiffman said.

But, what she found instead were people interested in tracing their family lines because "the family has moved a great deal, the chldren don't even know their grandparents and it has gotten very difficult to explain to a child what a cousin is," she says.

OTHER PEOPLE become interested because they inherited family artifacts and wanted to be able to know the people who once owned them, Mrs. Schiffman says.

"And some just wondered 'Who am I?' You don't know who you are unless you know who you were," she says.

The real fascination comes not in merely discovering the names of your forebears but in unraveling the stories which brought them to America.

"You cannot learn who they are and how they got here without studying their migration, without finding out how and why they moved. For an ancestor to leave his native land was a dramatic event," Mrs. Schiffman says.

IN TEACHING people how to find the dramatic events in their familys' pasts, Mrs. Schiffman discovered it was difficult for the average person to get the resource material, such as geneaology forms and books detailing what records were available to trace people. So she began selling these materials out of her home.

Her husband soon became involved in restoring old photos which professional photography studios had told people were irreparable, Mrs. Schiffman says.

She and her husband thought they might someday open a store centering around such activities but then along came "Roots."

"Where genealogy was the pastime of the little old lady, it became the favorite topic of newspapers," and the people who read them, Mrs. Schiffman says.

GENEALOGY BECAME the third most popular American hobby behind stamp and coin collecting, so "we figured if we were going to move we'd better move before somebody else did," she says.

She and her husband found it difficult to convince bankers and real estate salesmen they were establishing a legitimate business.

"They thought we were just some fly-by-night thing caused by 'Roots,' " Mrs. Schiffman says.

Other people thought she and her husband just hoped to charge people to sell them coats of arms or do family research for them.

"I DIDN'T KNOW there were so many people who didn't know what genealogy meant until I started this business. Our business will never be to trace somebody's genealogy," Mrs. Schiffman says.

Instead, she plans to teach classes at the store, located near the corner of Dundee and Buffalo Grove roads, and let her customers trace their own roots.

She also will sell supplies such as family charts and genealogy source books which are still difficult to find in many libraries, she says. She also hopes to have special guest lecturers speak on how to trace one's family in other lands.

Arlington Park seeks 64 dates

Arlington Park Race Track was among 11 corporations to meet Friday's application deadline for night harness racing dates originally awarded to Washington Park, which was destroyed by fire last winter.

The Illinois Racing Board will decide Aug. 1 which of the businesses will be allotted the 78 days of racing from Oct. 1 to Dec. 31.

Besides Arlington Park, the sites requested to run the meet are Maywood Park, Sportsman's Park, Balmoral Park and Aurora Downs.

MAYWOOD AND Arlington parks are favored by racing board members, a source close to them said.

"If a vote were taken now I think it would be 50-50," the spokesman said. "The question is whether Arlington Park can be ready in time."

Joseph Joyce, President of Arlington Park, said he guarantees the changes necessary to convert the thoroughbred track to harness racing will be completed before the season starts.

Arlington Park originally requested dates starting Oct. 1 but Joyce said a week is needed after the end of the thoroughbred season Oct. 1 to convert the track.

He applied for 64 days from Oct. 10-Dec. 22. Races from Dec. 22-Dec. 31 will be held for charity.

"THERE IS NO question that everything will be ready by Oct. 10," he said. "If we get the dates we'll be prepared."

The transformation at Arlington Park would cost $1.5 million, Joyce said. If awarded the dates, racing would begin at the track at 7 p.m., one hour earlier than at other harness racing tracks.

William Masterson, racing board secretary, said the decision will be based on which tracks will provide the most revenue for the state.

'The key thing is where we can make the most money," he said. "We will look at past figures of daily attendance and handle and at Arlington make a guess as to what the number might be.

"THE BIG QUESTION is: Will Arlington do as well as Maywood or some of the other tracks if it is awarded the dates," he said. "The answer is up to the board."

The corporations requesting harness racing at Maywood Park and the dates they want are the Egyptian Trotting Assn., 30 days from Oct. 1 to Nov. 30; Associates Racing Assn., 60 days from Oct. 1 to Dec. 9; Maywood Park Trotting Assn., 37 days from Oct. 1 to Nov. 12; Aurora Downs, 53 days from Oct. 1 to Dec. 31; and Northern Illinois Racing Assn., 71 days from Oct. 1 to Dec. 22.

Businesses requesting harness races at Sportsman's Park are Chicago Downs Assn. and the Fox Valley Trotting Club, each wanting seven days from Oct. 1-8.

At Balmoral Park Balmoral Park Trot Inc., has asked for 35 days from Oct. 1 to Nov. 18 and the Balmoral Racing Club wants 71 days from Oct. 1 to Dec. 23.

And the Washington Park Harness Race Trotting Corp., representing Arlington Park, wants 64 days from Oct. 10 to Dec. 31.

MacCoun to lead fund drive

Malcolm D. MacCoun, president of Northwest Community Hospital, has been selected campaign chairman of the Arlington Heights United Way fund drive.

This year's campaign will begin Sept. 20. The local collection goal is $80,000.

The United Way includes the United Fund, Community Chest and Crusade of Mercy, and funds the Northwest Mental Health Assn., Salvation Army family services, OMNI-House: Youth Services Bureau and Volunteer Service Bureau.

Area Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, Camp Fire Girls and 4-H clubs also get funds.

All money collected locally from residents and businesses is distributed in Arlington Heights, officials said.

MacCoun, who will head the drive locally, has been president of Northwest Community Hospital 10 years.

Others involved in the local campaign include Robert Eichelman of Teletype Corp., who is president and board of directors of the Arlington Heights United Way, and Earl Johnson, executive secretary of the drive and the Chamber of Commerce.

later by Patrolman Otto Schuster. The driver, Robert S. Gregorio, 17, of 730 S. Roosevelt, was charged with conspiracy to commit a crime. He implicated the two youths who Waite had chased: James R. Carbery, 18, of 1026 S. Chestnut Ave., and a juvenile whom police would not name. They were charged with disorderly conduct.

Later, another juvenile was arrested for breaking curfew. At the time the youth was harassing an employe of Hillside Towing who had been called to two Gregorio's car, police said.

Such incidents are becoming more and more common, Arlington Heights Police Chief Robert Derks said Friday.

"This was just a sample of the problem. We're getting similar complaints from all over town," Derks said, "for things like throwing groceries in supermarkets and pulling up picnic blankets in the parks.

"THEIR ATTITUDE is 'get out of our way — we're coming through.' It's getting to the point now where the degree of intimidation is very serious," Derks said.

Last week about 55 residents from an area bounded by Central Road, Cedar Avenue, Ridge Avenue and Arlington Heights Road attended a special meeting with Police Capt. Paul Buckholz to complain about the disorderly conduct of teen-age youth.

"To be quite frank, those 55 people were quite hostile. They're fed up," Buckholz said.

Neighbors of Ervin Peters interviewed Friday by The Herald admit that on many nights youths using the street are very noisy and they have noticed that Peters has been singled out.

"Sure their's loud music, but they're not destructive. I think it's fairly typical behavior," one neighbor said.

Begin affirms Israel's plan, U.S. friendship

NEW YORK (UPI) — Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin, bringing what he called a "complete peace plan" to President Carter, said Friday he hoped that as a result of his White House talks "peace will reign in the Middle East."

Begin, guarded by heavy security on his arrival at New York's Kennedy Airport, declined to give any details of the new Israeli peace plan saying, "The President should be the first to hear about it."

In an apparent overture to healing the rift between Israel and the United States, Begin reminded reporters on his airport arrival of Israel's human rights record and of Israeli contributions to U.S. national security.

However, Begin reiterated Israel's opposition to the creation of a Palestinian state in the Middle East as a "mortal danger to Israel." President Carter has called for a "Palestinian homeland" as part of any Middle East peace settlement, a statememt which cooled relations between Israel and Washington.

BEGIN SAID HIS plan, which the Israeli cabinet approved two days ago, was "a detailed proposal for the foundation of the peacemaking process" in the Middle East. Asked if it was a zz"complete peace plan," Begin replied, "Yes, you may call it that."

"We in Israel want peace, yearn and pray for peace," Begin said. "I am hopeful that as a result of the meeting with the President, negotiations to conclude peace treaties between Israel and the Arab countries will start and, as a result, peace will reign in the Middle East."

Government sources in Tel Aviv say the plan may call for Israel to give up some conquered lands in the Golan Heights and Sinai peninsula but insist on Israeli retention of Jerusalem and the West Bank of Jordan.

Carter orders cuts in his staff

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Carter Friday ordered a "very drastic" 28 per cent cut in the White House staff, and proposed other reductions in his executive offices which he estimated would save $6 million a year. The President, announcing the cutbacks personally, said that overall he has ordered elimination of 250 of the 1,712 jobs in the Executive Office of the President, including 134 of the 485 White House posts. In a separate message to Congress, he proposed knocking out seven of the 17 units in the EOP. While Carter has independent power to reduce the EOP staff, his proposals on eliminating entire units are subject to congressional veto by either house within 60 days.

Kirkpatrick to get CIA post?

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Carter is considering appointing Lyman B. Kirkpatrick Jr., a CIA veteran from Cold War days, as deputy director and eventual operating head of the intelligence agency, administration sources said Friday. If nominated and confirmed, Kirkpatrick would be chief deputy to Adm. Stansfield Turner. Under proposed reorganization plans, Turner could then devote himself fully to his other duties as overall director of central intelligence — the "czar" of all U.S. spy groups — while Kirkpatrick runs day-to-day CIA operations. Kirkpatrick, celebrating his 61st birthday at his home at Narragansett, R.I., declined comment Friday. One report, howver, said he met with Carter early this week and told him he is willing to serve again.

Schmidt's wristwatch swiped

WASHINGTON (UPI) — West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt departed the United States Friday, leaving behind the nagging assumption some one at Washington's National Press Club had "ripped off" his gold wristwatch. A spokesman for the West Germany Embassy confirmed the watch had not been found or returned when the German leader departed from Andrews Air Force Base in his special jet. A U.S. Secret Service agent who headed the search for the timepiece said the watch was of white gold and had a "very fine link bracelet." He said he could not comment further. In order to better keep track of his time, Schmidt was reported to have removed the watch and placed it on a table near the lecturn in the ballroom of the NPC during his luncheon address to a crowd of 425 guests Thursday. Waiters, well wishers and journalists retrieving microphones and tape recorders converged on the speaker's table after Schmidt concluded. Later, when Schmidt realized the watch was gone, a German aide and two Secret Service men hurriedly returned to the club and spent more than an hour searching the room and inspecting the linen which had already been stripped off the tables.

Ray breakout may bring hearing

PETROS, Tenn. (UPI) — Attorneys for James Earl Ray said Friday his chances for a full hearing on the Martin Luther King assassination may have been greatly aided by the June 10th breakout at Brushy Mountain State Prison. Ray was bound by Sessions Court Judge John M. Davis to the Morgan County Grand Jury under $5,000 bond for his part in the escape after a hearing which lasted about an hour and a half. Mark Lane, a New York attorney who has written extensively about conspiracy theories in the death of President John F. Kennedy and King, said that if Ray is tried on the escape charge later this month the whole question of his confinement at Memphis in 1969 will be raised. Lane said that if for some reason, Morgan County authorities decide not to prosecute the escape charge, suit will be filed in federal court in Memphis raising the same basic issues.

Thailand's paper hits the streets

BANGKOK, Thailand (UPI) — Thailand Friday became the first anti-Communist country in Southeast Asia to publish a newspaper officially in competition with commercial dailies. Chao Phya, named after the river, which nourishes Bangkok, is published by the Office of the Prime Minister, Tanin Kraivixien. The 28-page inaugural edition included a lead story about the arrest of an opium courier, an article on a current controversy between the government and the press, two pages of sports and an editorial headed "The Role of the Press in the Third World."

Egypt enforces Islamic law

CAIRO, Egypt (UPI) — Jolted by a resurgence of Moslem religious sentiment, the government is moving quietly to enforce Islamic law which provides stiff punishments for thieves, adulterers, drunkards and Moslem renegades. The Justice Ministry has drafted four bills, and work is continuing on other laws, designed to convert the country from secular to "theocratic law." The draft bills will have to be approved first by the cabinet and then by the 360-man Parliament before they take effect.

Red Chinese pilot defects

TAIPEI, Taiwan (UPI) — A defecting Chinese pilot Friday renounced Communist China as a "dark hell" and a grateful Nationalist Chinese government handed him $750,000 in gold and declared him a lieutenant colonel in its air force. Fan Yuan-yen, who flew a MiG19 jet fighter plane from a base in China to Taiwan a week ago, appeared before more than 1,000 persons at a special ceremony. He raised a fist high above his head and said: "Today, standing in front of the portrait of our founding father, Dr. Sun Yat-sen, I solemnly declare to all the compatriots of my country that I have forever renounced the Chinese Communist party and shall always fight the Communist party."

Harper 'political games' blasted by Klussmann

by RENA WISH COHEN

The tone was far from strident, but the message was a reprimand of unexpected proportions.

When the Harper College Board of Trustees approved a 1977-78 budget that will require the college to dig more than $1.3 million into its cash reserves to cover $15.8 million in projected expenses, board member Joan Klussmann delivered a blistering attack on the Harper administration for behind-the-scenes attempts to discredit the board's budget decisions.

Mrs. Klussmann, a former president of the Arlington Heights Dist. 25 Board of Education who was elected to the Harper board in April, blasted statements made to the press by the administration and a former Harper board member implying that the board's failure to raise tuition for the coming school year was leading the college to the brink of financial collapse.

Robert Lahti

Joan Klussman

AT $15 PER CREDIT hour, Harper's tuition is already higher than area community colleges, and Mrs. Klussmann said she voted against the tuition increase partly to provide a "respite, however temporary," for financially strapped students, and partly to satisfy "a desire to become more confident in the accuracy of the administration's facts and figures."

"In six years' service on another school board, I have never seen the distortions and political games which are commonplace here," Mrs. Klussmann said. "Continual attempts are made to set board members against one another and the community against the board."

Mrs. Klussmann disputed charges that the board's refusal to authorize a $1-per-hour tuition increase jeopardizes Harper's treasury. She said $200,000 in budget cuts made by the board would offset the additional $216,000 in revenue the increase would have generated, and she noted that Harper's educational fund still will have $1.2 million in cash reserves at the end of the 1977-78 school year.

"If costs escalate beyond our current projections or if a future referendum is defeated, the board can trim costs or raise tuition by $2 next year," Mrs. Klussmann said.

ROBERT MOATS, one of three board members who favored a tuition increase, cast the lone vote against the $15.8 million budget in symbolic protest against the board's failure to raise tuition during a meeting late Thursday.

"According to projections, by 1980-81, even if the referendum has passed and tuition has been raised, we'll still be dropping our fund balance by roughly $300,000 a year," Moats said.

Roberts given 8 years for watch mail fraud

The swindle Dennis L. Roberts thought would make him millions instead is sending him to prison.

Roberts, 46, the man who bilked thousands in a Des Plaines-based mail order scheme to sell digital watches, was sentenced Friday to eight years in federal prison, five additional years of probation and a $50,000 fine.

Further, U.S. District Court Judge John P. Crowley ordered that Roberts "make restitution" to those defrauded in his $1.7 million scheme.

He will be eligible for parole after serving one-third of his sentence.

THE FINAL ORDER was a key factor in the sentencing because government prosecutors say they have been unable to locate more than half of the $1.7 million Roberts collected through Teltronics, Ltd., his phoney business.

Some $800,000 of the total is being held in receivership under a Cook County Circuit Court order obtained by Illinois Atty. Gen. William J. Scott.

But another $900,000, which prosecutors believe is in Mexican bank accounts, is unaccounted for and presumably still available to Roberts.

Roberts, Lake Forest, had been found guilty May 28 of 50 counts of mail fraud, each count carrying a maximum possible penalty of five years in jail and a $1,000 fine.

IN HANDING DOWN the sentence Friday, Crowley disregarded defense attorney Robert Bailey's plea for a single five-year concurrent sentence on all counts.

"I've got to say that I've reflected on this case and I've never seen a scheme that was so carefully thought out and played," Crowley said. "I'm convinced that, for whatever reasons, Mr. Roberts decided he was going to defraud thousands."

He said he became convinced of Roberts' guilt following the testimony for the government from a Hong Kong watch distributor who was supplying sample digital watches to Roberts for $20 to $25 each.

TESTIMONY IN THE jury trial showed that Roberts used an ad in TV Guide magazine promoting his business to assure the Hong Kong supplier that his operation was authentic, though Roberts was buying the sample watches for more than the $16.95 and $17.95 he was to sell them.

"As far as I was concerned, I didn't need any more evidence," Crowley said.

Keeping playgrounds safe for kids is constant task

by HOLLY HANSON

In June, Herald reporters visited 30 Northwest suburban playgrounds chosen at random to see if the equipment there was in safe condition, ready for the summer crunch of children at play.

They found several examples of poorly maintained and unrepaired apparatus, with conditions not up to guidelines suggested by the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission.

It is mid-July now. the hordes of children have arrived. Some of the repairs have not.

On Thursday and Friday, Herald reporters found the following equipment still in need of repair:

• Missing or broken swings with chains dangling on the ground at Ross School, Prospect Heights.

• A set of monkey bars at Campanelli School, Schaumburg, with several missing bolts, leaving one unattached bar.

Herald reporters also found that the following items had been fixed:

• At Emerson Park in Mount Prospect, a slide with no guardrail at the top of its eight-foot platform had been given a new one.

• Broken swings had been repaired or replaced at Sanborn School, Palatine: Westbrook School, Mount Prospect; and Pioneer Park, Arlington Heights.

Prospect Heights Dist. 23 Assistant Supt. Gerald McGovern said the broken swing at Ross School "probably is on the list for summer repair." Overhauling playground equipment is a summer-long job, he said.

FOR MOST PARK and school districts, keeping the equipment in good shape is a constant battle against vandalism and normal wear and tear.

Because of its popularity with kids, the piece of apparatus that seems to take the most abuse is the chain swing.

A visit to most local parks will prove that. There are swings dragging lengths of chain on the ground, swings wrapped around the poles from which they hang and swings with their rubber seats slashed.

"In the summer, it's an almost daily project to unwrap the swings," Mount Prospect Dist. 57 Supt. Earl Sutter said. "It's something older children think of as an interesting evening activity."

STATIONARY PIECES of equipment come in for their share of abuse, too. Vandals successfully ruined a set of wooden stepping blocks at a Dist. 54 school, Schaumburg Park District Supt. Ron Dudley said, and the cost to replace the item tops $1,000.

He said Dist. 54 apparatus is checked weekly, but pointed out that little can be done if vandals strike two hours after the week's inspction is made.

School and park districts also are making an effort to cut down on injuries by getting rid of high-risk equipment — spiraling tornado slides, slippery monkey bars, merry-go-rounds — and by increasing maintenance checks.

That action is helping to hold down the number of injuries associated with playground equipment, but park and school district officials emphasize that parents can lend a hand by reporting damaged equipment when they find it.

THE SECOND MEETING, also at the Hartman House, was arranged by Valenza in mid-May and attended by Hein and a third official. Guttilla said he demanded that the police department be free from "any political influence because I knew that the village at that time was in a — it wasn't a stable community."

Guttilla said he accepted the job the first week of June and started work on June 15. Although he had been recruited as police chief, Guttilla said his contract was for the position of acting chief. This was explained to him as a legal technicality stemming from Horcher's disability.

In his deposition, Guttilla said it was Hein who informed him that his title would be changed from acting chief to police chief.

"Billy Hein came into my office prior to March 12th. This is 1973. He said 'You be at the village board meeting Monday night.' He said 'You're going to be sworn in as chief of police.' This is Billy Hein. He said 'We are raising your salary from $18,000 to $20,000,'" Guttilla said.

Guttilla said he has applied for several jobs since leaving Wheeling, including an investigator's job with the state department of revenue and a security guard post at a downtown hotel.

ONE OF MORE than 30 injured from fumes in a 30-story Landmark Hotel tower receives emergency treatment before being taken to a hospital. The Landmark incident occurred four days after three had died in the Mark I apartment tower, only a few blocks from the Landmark.

Las Vegas hotel gas leak kills 1; scores injured

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (UPI)—A toxic gas, apparently seeping through air conditioning vents at the Landmark Hotel-Casino, Friday killed at least one person and injured scores of others.

At least 800 to 1,000 guests and gamblers fled the space-needle shaped hotel.

The victim was ntt immediately identified.

three hospitals to handle the flood of injured.

Clark County Fire Chief LeRoy Hawks said a 10th-floor air conditioning unit had been located which appeared to be the major source of the toxic fumes.

Firemen, equipped with breathing packs, spread out quickly throughout the gambling resort in an attempt to locate the source of the fumes and cut them off.

"It was like taking my last breath. The air smelled sweet. It was invisible but you knew something was there," said Don Thompson, a guest from Denver, Colo.

HE SAID his mouth became dry quickly and he was gasping for air.

Ken Schreiber, also of Denver, said he could not pinpoint the kind of smell. He said his father was the first taken to the hospital and he was the person who notified hotel security guards.

Authorities said the toxic gas, believed to be Freon gas which is used in air conditioning, began seeping throughout the hotel about 7:30 a.m. PDT.

A spokesman for Summa Corp., the company owned by the late Howard Hughes, said 800 to 1,000 guests, employes and gamblers were ordered out of the 30-story resort which has a total of 490 rooms. Besides the rooms located in the tower, hotel rooms are also positioned around a swimming pool patio in three-story buildings.

Southern Nevada Hospital reported setting up emergency treatment beds in the hallways after a recently expanded emergency room was overfilled.

Others were reported under treatment at Sunrise Hospital and Valley Hospital.

The gas leak was preceded by a power failure at the space needle-shaped resort as well as a flooding problem in the basement of the hotel. Investigators said the incidents could be related.

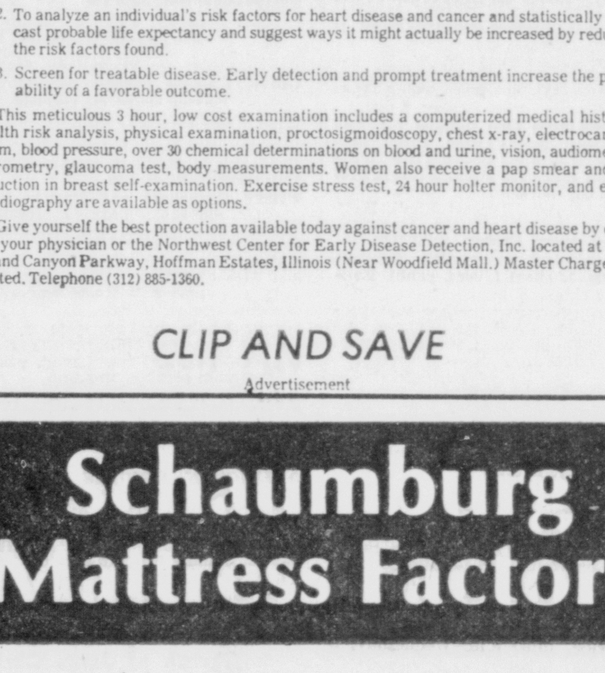
CANCER DETECTION
HEART ATTACK PREVENTION



A resting electrocardiogram is taken at the Northwest Center for Early Disease Detection, Inc. to detect any heart abnormalities.

Of every six people who get cancer today, two will be saved and four will die. Of the four who would otherwise die, one might be saved with earlier diagnosis and prompt treatment. (According to American Cancer Society publication '76 Cancer Facts and Figures.)

The health examination services available at the Northwest Center for Early Disease Detection include all cancer detection procedures recommended by the American Cancer Society, Illinois Division.

Heart Disease accounts for nearly half of all deaths each year. Unlike most Cancer, Heart Attack can be postponed through reducing one's risk factors such as diet, exercise, blood pressure, smoking, etc. Dr. Morris Collen, a well-known specialist in preventive medicine, was quoted in the January, 1977 Issue of FORTUNE "if one has a checkup every year or two at age thirty-five and thereafter, directed at postponable diseases, the mortality rate from those diseases after seven years is approximately 50 percent of what it would have been without exams."

The Northwest Center for Early Disease Detection, Inc. offers a preventive health screening examination designed for three purposes:

1. To establish a health profile for each individual to be used as a baseline for future care.
2. To analyze an individual's risk factors for heart disease and cancer and statistically forecast probable life expectancy and suggest ways it might actually be increased by reducing the risk factors found.
3. Screen for treatable disease. Early detection and prompt treatment increase the probability of a favorable outcome.

This meticulous 3 hour, low cost examination includes a computerized medical history, health risk analysis, physical examination, proctosigmoidoscopy, chest x-ray, electrocardiogram, blood pressure, over 30 chemical determinations on blood and urine, vision, audiometry, spirometry, glaucoma test, body measurements. Women also receive a pap smear and instruction in breast self-examination. Exercise stress test, 24 hour holter monitor, and echocardiography are available as options.

Give yourself the best protection available today against cancer and heart disease by calling your physician or the Northwest Center for Early Disease Detection, Inc. located at 1000 Grand Canyon Parkway, Hoffman Estates, Illinois (Near Woodfield Mall.) Thoughts on a mattress

A one act play

Place:	Someone's Bedroom.
Time:	11:30 P.M.
Mabel:	John, are you awake?
John:	Naturally I'm awake. Who could sleep on this mattress?
Mabel:	It's only six years old and they told us it should last 15 or 20 years.
John:	They meant that's how much older we would get if we slept on it for six years.
Mabel:	It was their best mattress. It is supposed to have over 800 coils in it.
John:	I know — I can feel every one of them poking me in the side.
Mabel:	We should go to the Schaumburg Mattress Factory. They make a beautiful mattress — it has the cutest shaped coils in it.
John:	How do you know so much about them?
Mabel:	I was there with Marge last month. She says their new mattress is fantastic. Why don't you go right now?
John:	Are you crazy? It's almost midnight!
Mabel:	Then where are you going?
John:	I'm going to sleep on the sofa.
Mabel:	Oh no you don't. You had the sofa last night. You can sleep on the floor tonight!

Joy of teaching no longer keeps instructors in class

by TERRY HERSHEY

Experienced teachers in the Northwest suburbs are holding on to their jobs because of higher pay scales and benefits, despite a nationwide trend reported by the National Education Assn. showing tenured teachers with several years' experience are leaving the ranks in increasing numbers.

The NEW study said that teachers are younger, better educated, better paid and mmore disillusioned about their jobs than before.

A Herald survey of local school officials and teachers confirms some of the findings.

Local districts believe the demands placed on teachers have increased the complexity and stress of teaching. Some have adopted early retirement programs that allow older teachers to leave the profession and pursue other interests.

IN DISTRICT 214, the average age of teachers has risen while experience has remained the same or increased slightly. Two years ago the average was 33. Now it is 40. But the teachers are better paid and better educated — tye typical 214 teacher holds a master's degree and earns $18,274 per year.

Alvah Stone, associate superintendent of Dist. 59 said those teachers leaving the district generally have less than 8 years' of experience. And the most common reasons for leaving are family responsibilities, particularly maternity leave and the job transfer of a spouse.

That was the common response in all local districts. Turnover in local districts averages between 3 and 12 per cent annually and administrators said the majority of individuals left for parental leave, with transfers the second most common reason. A check with teachers who resigned at the end of this school year seemed to verify the district's figures.

Barbara Chrisman, who resigned from dist. 21 after teaching for 10 years, said there were increasing problems facing teachers.

She said during the time she has been teaching, discipline has become more of a problem, and that teachers are providing more of a baby-sitting service because of the number of families in which both parents work.

OF THOSE LEAVING for other reasons, entering business was the most popular one, although the number doing so was small.

Ronald Ruble, Dist. 54 assistant superintendent in charge of personnel, said the few that leave for another occupation generally choose business "for a challenge and a different start in life."

"They probably make more money, but they also have more flexible hours and the ability to travel," which makes business attractive, he said.

After 10 years of teaching, one Dist. 21 teacher left simply because he needed more money to support his family.

A DIST. 25 SCIENCE instructor left for a sales job in a science-related field. Among his reasons for leaving were a change of pace, more money and attractive fringe benefits including a company car.

Robert Cudney, Dist. 214 assistant superintendent for personnel services, said he believes those who leave education do it for "a new challenge and adventure."

"Sometimes an individual will teach for 10 or 15 years and then reach that point in his 30s when he decides if he is going to make a career change it will have to be now," Cudney said.

"Some feel they have given their best and they feel they could accomplish more outside. But the percentage of those individuals is very small" — less than one-half of 1 per cent.

THE EARLY retirement programs introduced recently in several districts may be the answer for those feel "burned out" after years of who feel "burned out" after years of teaching.

ment plan that allows teachers to retire at 55. The teachers who have taken advantage of the program are retiring from teaching, but not from working said Supt. Roger Bardwell. Some of those leaving have taken part-time consulting work or entered fields such as real estate, he said.

Cudney said Dist. 214 adopted an early retirement plan at the urging of the teachers.

"It's not a complete retirement though, it's a career change. One Dist. 214 teacher took an early retirement to start a chicken farm in Arkansas.

''MANY MIGHT THINK I'I've taught for 30 years. I gave everything I can.' There's a lot of stress and strain on teachers, and I would have to think a lot of them would be burned out by that time." Cudney said.

Young claims blackout invited the poor to loot

GENEVA, Switzerland (UPI)—U.N. Ambassador Andrew Young said Friday the New York blackout was an invitation to looters, saying, "If you turn the lights out, folk will steal especially if they're hungry."

About the New York power failure, which led to widespread looting and stealing in the city's ghettos, Young first replied in a humorout tone.

"Sin began with Adam," Young said. "All men sin and fall short of the glory of God. If you turn the lights out, folk will steal. They'll do that in Switzerland, too."

"But they'll do that especially if they're hungry, and you've got to realize that in New York you're probably running at unemployment levels of about 30 to 40 per cent amongst young adults."

Concerning the neutron bomb, which kills people while leaving buildings intact, Young said he hopes Carter will never order its development.

Korean probe much too slow

The U.S. House of Representatives has stalled long enough in investigating the lingering scandal which has been given the name Korea-gate.

The House Ethics Committee has supposedly been probing allegations of South Korean influence buying on Capitol Hill for the past six months. But the committee met only seven times in that period.

Disclosures this week of additional congressmen who admit receiving campaign contributions from one of the prime Korean figures in the investigation add to the sense that it is past time for a thorough investigation.

The campaign contributions disclosed this week were legal at the time and involved respected congressmen, including U.S. Rep. Morris Udall, D-Arizona. While in themselves the new disclosures wouldn't amount to much, they are one more indication of how wide-ranging Korean influence peddling was on Capitol Hill.

Recent reports indicate that as many as 115 Congressmen — one-fourth of the House — may have received something of value from the Koreans. Such widespread passing of favors must be thoroughly investigated.

So far, the House Ethics Committee and the Justice Department, which are conducting separate investigations, have apparently been as unable to crack the Korean case as the early investigators of the Watergate scandal were.

The solution, unless the present investigations get on track, ought to be the same as the solution to the flagging Watergate probe. A special prosecutor ought to be appointed to conduct an unbiased investigation.

So far no one seems eager for a special prosecutor. That is not surprising, given the potentially explosive nature of the case.

However, this is a case where officials have the opportunity to prove that Congressional leaders are as diligent in rooting out Congressional corruption as they were in uncovering the misdeeds of a Republican president in the Watergate cover-up case.

The public has the right to no less an investigation than occurred during the Watergate scandal. If the House Ethics Committee cannot do that, a prosecutor who can ought to be put on the case.

Who defines 'loophole'

Tax loopholes make easy targets — in general.

In specific, it all depends on who's defining the term "loophole."

A case clearly illustrating that subject occurred this week when the new Internal Revenue Service commissioner Jerome Kurtz said in an interview that the IRS is studying ways to collect tax on employe benefits such as free parking, free lunches and free airline rides.

Free parking? The mind boggles at the possibility of the average worker paying income tax because his company provides him with a parking space. Kurtz admits that in taxing parking, it would be difficult to put a value on space in a big suburban lot. However, he says, "Someone who drives into Manhattan, where parking a car on a daily basis costs $100 or more a month, and who gets free parking in a building is realizing income of $100 a month."

Well, maybe. But somehow closing that particular loophole — if it is one — strikes us as not being the most useful possible thing for the IRS to be doing. For one thing, enforcement could easily cost more than the extra tax collected.

There may in fact be some abuses of employe perquisites that require IRS attention. Kurtz particularly singled out the free plane rides airlines give their employes as an item of concern.

Kurtz does say some fringe benefits, including health insurance, ought to remain tax free. And he says other items of small value, including a Christmas ham or turkey, are not subject to IRS scrutiny.

Good heavens, we certainly hope not.

Magda Lupescu—Balkan Farrah Fawcett Majors

Paul Greenberg

The first shock on hearing the news that Magda Lupescu is dead at the age of 81 is that the famed Balkan beauty had allowed herself to become 81. A gentleman I know recalls catching a glimpse of Magda Lupescu and her Romanian king while visiting Mexico 30 or 40 years ago; his eyes still light up at the memory. He doesn't recall exactly how the king looked.

As for males of a younger generation, when I asked one of them last week if he had heard the news about Magda Lupescu, he replied: "No, what happened to it?"

Not only has her aura faded, but it is unlikely that a saga like hers would capture the world's attention again, not in an age when royalty and class structure don't seem to mean all that much even to Europeans.

BUT ONCE UPON a time a king of Romania gave up queen, crown and country fo this most uncommon commoner. Magda Lupescu was the Farrah Fawcett-Majors figure of her time, when celebrities lasted for decades instead of weeks. And her story, in addition to a red-headed temptress, featured Balkan politics, foreign intrigue and glamorous exile on the Riviera.

Magda Lupescu's origins have remained appropriately mysterious. She was variously described as Jewess or gypsy, which is the European equivalent of speculating that someone of romantic notoriety has a Touch of the Brush, or as the discreet used to say in old Louisiana, "comes from Creole background."

Madame Lupescu took the name Princess Helena when King Carol was called back to the throne for 11 tumultuous, and tempestuous, years. In addition to her other attainments, she was given the credit, or blame, for the king's remarkable comeback, his seizing dictatorial power, his ouster soon afterward and just about everything else that happened in or around Romania when she was still active.

SOME OF THE ROMANCE went out of the story when the couple was married in Brazil, but the mystery was retained when the heroine was reported dying of leukemia and then miraculously recovered. In her time the Lupescu (an interesting construction in itself, and indicative of her singularity) combined the fascinations of Delilah, Lady Macbeth, Eva Peron, Laetrile and Lourdes.

Part of the attraction may have resided in the very sound of her name. There are certain words that have a charm of their own whether one knows their specific definition or not — like Plantagenet and basilisk. Romanian seems full of them. It is always disappointing to realize that Kashkavall is only a stew and Mamaliga cornhmeal mush.

Like the Orient Express, Magda Lupescu is now only a forgotten name out of a more romantic past. But for a time she captivated not only a king but a world.

Ethics board member has reconsidered

Someone has said, "A man convinced against his will is of the same opinion still." No truer words could apply when speaking of the events surrounding the most recent "advisory opinion" of the Wheeling board of ethics. Each of the two members on the board had written an opinion concerning the status of Village President William Hein on the question of conflict of interest in his position of liquor commissioner — a position which, according to state statutes, is inseparable from his elected position.

The ethics board members had opposite opinions and each felt that the case he/she had prepared was good. Of course, a split decision could have been given, but, after discussion and the argument that one of the opinions was based on "impressions" and was therefore indefensible, that opinion was abandoned. The other opinion was decided upon as the one to be presented to the village board.

I was the ethics board member who was persuaded that the opinion I had prepared was not the proper one — so I reluctantly signed the opinion which was sent to the village board. That act has been eating at me ever since.

Even though I was persuaded to abandon my written opinion, I am still of the opinion that ethically Mr. Hein is on precariously thin ice as liquor commissioner since his parents hold two liquor licenses in the village. I am still of the opinion that anyone in public office should avoid even the appearance of conflict for the good of government and the village. I am still of the opinion that public officials belong to the public and represent government and that their actions, public and private, can be a source of credit or embarrassment for the public service.

No one knows that Mr. Hein would be influenced by the fact that his decisions as liquor commissioner could involve his own close relatives, but, by the same token, no one knows that he would not or could not be so influenced. I am still of the opinion that Mr. Hein is in an untenable position and that, ethically, he cannot serve as liquor commissioner of Wheeling. Since that position is inseparable, by statute, from his present elected position, the alternative is clear.

Of course, as he says, Mr. Hein has his "own code of ethics." So has James Stavros and William Bieber, and, for that matter, so have I! That is why we have an Ethics Code by Ordinance — to serve as a guide and set standards of ethical behavior for public officials and employes. That is why we have a board of ethics to help interpret the code. The fact that the present ethics ordinance is about to be changed by Mr. Hein and associates is another whole story.

I realize this letter will not change the situation nor undo what has been done, but I sure feel better having written it.

'RTA gas tax swindles suburbs'

In what can only be called a "sub-urban gas tax swindle," the suburbs again have taken their lumps from the RTA. Not only will any gas tax work a hardship on those who must drive to work, but there is no possibility of any significant mass transit facilities forthcoming for working suburbanites from this new tax. Most suburbanites both live and work in the suburbs. They will continue to do so after the imposition of the new tax this fall, and will continue to have to drive to work. This is by the RTA's own admission that forseeable mass transit improvements in the suburban area will come primarily in 'off-peak,' i.e., non-rush hour, periods.

Saddest of all is the outrageous dissembling which has surrounded passage of the gas tax. Suburbanites have been led to believe they at least might be getting their fair share of the new tax revenues generated. Closer examination of the RTA budget shows this is not at all true. Rail and bus subsidies from the RTA totalled $47 million in 1977. In fiscal 1978 these subsidies, which provide the closest approximation of suburban expenditures, are to be $65 million, a gain of some $18 million. But the gas tax is expected to raise $34 million in the suburban area in the same period! Even allowing some small proportion of increased CTA funds as attributable to the suburban area, this leaves unaccounted for some $15 million.

The answer to these missing funds does not lie in juggling figures in the capital expenditure budget, as these are even more grossly out of line than operating expenditures. Unfortunately no complete figures are available in the RTA budget on capital expenditures as no data have been provided for projects such as the Chicago Urban Transit District and the O'Hare Rapid Transit extension, both enormously expensive items.

The search for the lost gas tax funds can only lead to the conclusion that the RTA has flouted the General Assembly's requirement that gas tax funds be spent in the area in which collected. The pattern of cheating the suburban area continues unabated. With 54 per cent of the population, by 1970 census figures, the suburbs in fiscal 1978 are given the paltry sum of 32 cents of operating subsidies.

Most regretfully additional taxes mean fewer jobs and less income, not more. Beautiful and flowery statements have been issued regularly by our governmental leaders on the need for new industry and new jobs. Unfortunately taxing workers and those who must drive while making a living is not the answer. Such maneuvers only cause added out-migration of industry and a resistance to new investment in the Chicagoland area. Hopefully the Illinois legislature will investigate this whole problem further since the economic and transportation well-being of northeastern Illinois have just taken a massive step backward.

1980 plan by Carter starts now

(Commentary)

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Carter appears to be gearing up for his 1980 reelection campaign.

He is paying more attention now to special interests, with assumed voting clout, after acting as a more or less free agent during his first six months in office.

Carter has said repeatedly that he has no political debts for his successful presidential campaign. But there are groups who think otherwise.

REGARDLESS, HE is moving in a direction of protecting all flanks, some of which may have become dissidents because of administration policy.

For example, Carter is supporting a broad revision of the federal labor laws which will make it easier for unions to organize, recruit new members and win contracts.

Carter ran afoul of AFL-CIO President George Meany when he gave only lukewarm support to the so-called common situs bill which would extend picketing rights in the construction industry. The legislation was defeated in Congress.

Organized labor also has become disenchanted by Carter's espousal of a $2.50 minimum wage. Labor advocates $3 an hour.

THEN, THERE IS the so-called Jewish vote. American Jewish leaders became alarmed at Carter's Middle East policies, support of a Palestinian homeland, and early contention with Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin.

As a consequence, Carter has been hearing from the Jewish leaders and so have top White House officials. Carter's top political lieutenant at the White House, who had been preoccupied with personnel appointments, moved into the breach and began to sit in on policy sessions.

Jewish leaders appeared to be much more encouraged on Carter's Middle East policy following a recent meeting with the President. They say he promised he would not draw a map or use arms grants as weapons to force Israel to make concessions to the Arabs.

Carter also has pleased business to a certain extent by leaving certain incentives in the economic stimulus package and focusing the spotlight on inflation rather than unemployment.

HIS ENERGY package also leaves profit loopholes for the oil industry. And the President has wooed environmentalists with his strong stand on wiping out some of the "pork barrel" dam projects.

By showing a conservative outlook on some matters, Carter also has managed to soften the opposition of some Republicans. The GOP still has not consolidated a strong opposition to Carter policies and former President Gerald Ford has toned down his once vocal criticism after private meetings with Carter.

Carter also is keeping in touch with homeplate, the South. He will attend a southern governors leadership conference later this month and also will tour the South during a two-day swing. He remains close to his southern friends and early supporters.

HE VISITED THE West Coast in May to emphasize his concern about the drought which has plagued California. And while there appears to be some stiffness vis-a-vis Gov. Jerry Brown, viewed as a possible opponent, their relations also have improved and Brown was an overnight guest at the White House.

Carter still has strong ties with Coretta King, widow of Martin Luther King and his father, the Rev. Martin Luther King Sr., and therefore is in touch with Civil Rights advocates.

But he has some repair work to do with the Black Caucus on Capitol Hill, which is seeking a meeting with him, and some black activists feel they have not gotten their fair share of the pie in the upper administration job bracket.

AN INDICATION that politics is on his mind also is apparent with the more frequent meetings he has had with Kenneth Curtis, chairman of the Democratic National Committee.

In addition, Carter wants to beef up Democratic Party machinery and to keep a certain amount of detachment and an air of non-partisanship in the White House.

But there is little doubt that the political power center will remain with Carter in the White House, and with strategists such as Hamilton Jordan and Press Secretary Jody Powell, who have helped him conduct his winning campaigns for governor and president.

As far as I know, there are only two ways to get rid of the junk in your house — sell the joint or have a garage sale.

Some good housekeeping types might point out that a third alternative is to give daily attention to such matters as organizing closet, dresser drawers and, yea verily, even basements.

However, I can't recognize such a suggestion due to an inherent tendency to clutter and being too pooped when I get home from work to give a hoot.

(ACTUALLY I DO give a hoot sometimes — like when I get up in the middle of the night and fall over something I should have put away yesterday.)

But back to house-cleaning the hard way and no, we're not going to sell the place.

Which leaves a garage sale, right?

Well, sort of right.

I'M GOING TO have a driveway sale because the garage is too full of left-overs from the basement to have a sale in.

You remember my basement.

It's part of the reason I'm not selling the house — I'd hate to see the real estate ads reading, "3 bdrm rnch w/REALLY full bsmt."

It's gotten so bad since I've been working that once AFTER I'd spent the entire weekend cleaning up down there, one of the kids came over and said, "Hey, Ma, let's get at this miserable mess next weekend."

GETTING READY for my driveway sale, I've made 247 trips up and down the stairs and spent so many hours sorting the stuff that, even if I sell everything, I will only realize about 17 cents an hour for my time.

Incidentally, all this chatter about my upcoming sale is not an attempt to get some free publicity for the event. In the first place, you don't know where I live and in the second place, I don't know when it's going to be. My best guess is sometime this year.

The preparations take time, you know, especially if you have an inherent tendency to mull a lot as well as clutter. I have mulled over so many items which I eventually priced at a nickel that they ought to be worth five dollars.

THERE WAS AUNT Mildred's picture, for instance.

Was it a genuine antique or just a sentimental family keepsake? I mulled so long over that one that it finally dawned on me there never was an Aunt Mildred in our family or any family I ever knew. So I threw her out, and c'est la vie, Aunt Milly.

If and when I ever have my sale, I have to hope that the minimum wage guys don't hear about it. With their $2.30 an hour edict, I may end up owing myself $1,500. And 30 cents.

Federal workers charge reverse discrimination

Watch on Washington

Carter administration efforts to force "affirmative action" for blacks, other minorities and women have resulted in bitter complaints of a reverse discrimination policy in hiring and promotion policies.

The furor was caused by circulation within the Civil Service Commission of an in-house policy proposal that was the brainchild of Jule Sugarman, vice chairman of the Civil Service Commission.

Civil Service Chairman Alan Campbell and Comr. Ersa Poston had tentatively agreed to adopt the Sugarman proposals without realizing the full sweep even as they agreed with its two key objectives:

- Provide more "affirmative action" to implement equal opportunity legislation in jobs within the Civil Service Commission and eventually within the entire government.
- Shake up the Civil Service Commission bureaucracy by bringing in new people from outside the agency.

Campbell said the original proposal circulated within the commission caused such an uproar that it is being revamped, and that he hopes the results will "be a balanced approach to both problems."

The original proposal would apply "to all present and future vacancies in managerial or key staff positions at GS-15 and above."

In addition to reserving all of those jobs for minorities and women, the policy proposal called for "redesign" of jobs so women and minorities could better qualify for them.

UNTIL THE proposed plan was circulated, Campbell said he did not realize that it could be interpreted as a dictate to fill all future Civil Service Commission appointments with blacks, other minorities or women.

He said that while the proposed directive will apply only to the Civil Service Commission jobs at the outset, it is inevitable that it will have its impact across the whole federal service.

While the proposed policy would encourage present employes to "broaden and round out their career development" the basic thrust is to recruit women and minorities rather than to promote from within.

Campbell said that while he expects the initial policy proposal "to be modified" to some degree, he feels the Carter administration is committed to "affirmative policies" in personnel that will substantially increase the number of women, blacks and other minorities in the higher paying supervisory jobs.

Senate panel eases off Lance pledge to sell stock

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Sympathetic members of a Senate panel indicated Friday they will not hold Budget Director Bert Lance to his promise to sell a huge block of bank stock by year's end because it might result in a big financial loss for him.

The Governmental Affairs Committee questioned Lance, then put off formal action on the matter. Lance testified he could not guarantee sale of the stock by a definite date unless the committee required it.

Some Republicans apparently were only willing to give Lance more time to sell his $90,000 shares of stock in the National Bank of Georgia but Democrats said he should not face any deadline.

Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill., who repeatedly worried about "the appearance of conflict of interest," said he was sure "we can reach a unanimous accord on this" to help Lance escape the "extreme hardship" he might suffer if forced to keep the pledge he made at his confirmation hearings in January.

SEN. JOHN GLENN, D-Ohio, ridiculed the whole controversy — saying it led him to think "we've gone completely ethics happy" in trying to make government officials "so Simon pure" they will be forced out of Washington.

Lance, testifying three days after President Carter appealed to the panel on his behalf, said, "I would like to see the stock disposed of as quickly as possible."

He said he would put it all in a "blind trust" administered by a corporate executive not connected to the bank.

As former president of the Atlanta bank, Lance holds 21 per cent of the stock. Since he bought it in 1975 and 1976, the value of a share has dropped from more than $17 to $9 and he would lose about $1.6 million if he had to sell now.

He said he owes $3.4 million on a loan he got to buy the stock and overall, his outstanding debts total about $5.3 million.

Several committee members from both parties said they were troubled primarily by Lance's indebtedness, in view of his role as one of Carter's close advisers and his influence on national economic policy.

But Lance, helped by friendly Democrats including Georgia's Sam Nunn, said his personal and official actions are totally unrelated.

At the end of the hearing, Committee Chairman Abraham Ribicoff, D-Conn., told Lance to talk to Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., chairman of the Banking Committee, and Sen. Edward Brooke, R-Mass., the panel's ranking GOP member. After getting a report from them, Ribicoff said, his own committee will act on Lance's bank stock problem — probably next week.

Confusion common in tax forms

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Commission on Federal Paperwork recommended Friday simplified income tax forms be made simpler and easier to read.

The 14-member commission, created in 1975 to cut down red tape in government, also recommended creation of a "federal information locator system," a computerized index to information already collected.

A commission report on tax, approved Friday, found that college-level reading ability was needed to understand 90 per cent of the instructions for Short Form 1040A, the simplest of the personal income tax returns. It found a person with 10th grade reading ability could grasp only about 70 per cent of the instructions.

THE REPORT said so few knew about Short Form 1040A that only 1 per cent of the taxpayers used the form for the 1975 tax year. Nearly 22 per cent who did use the short form paid for professionals to help them prepare the return.

The information locator system was one of 84 recommendations adopted Friday at the commission meeting. The system would cost $2.7 million to set up over a three-year period and need $750,000 to operate it on a yearly basis.

"We have found throughout the government a tremendous amount of duplicative work," a commission spokesman said.

"A locator approach," he said, "would allow standardized terms and provide an index as to who collects what information and where it is stored."

Take oil imports, the spokesman said. "We can get three different answers from three different agencies covering the same period.

"A colleague said there are now 279 energy programs in 44 agencies using 88 different data bases which mean at best a confusing and difficult situation."

He said the locator might be particularly helpful in the fields of energy, health and education where information is often available but difficult to find.

Nurse verdict a surprise to jury alternates

DETROIT (UPI)—Two alternate jurors who sat through the three month trial of two Filipino nursers convicted of poisoning hospital patients said Friday they were surprised at the verdict.

"I just cannot imagine how anyone could return a verdict like that," said Mrs. Kathleen Robinson, 25.

Rev. Robert Pannecouk said he believed the nine women and three men began their deliberations June 29 strongly leaning towards an acquittal.

"I BELIEVE they went in there with an attitude that the two women were not guilty," he said.

Filipina Narciso, 31, and Leonora Perez, 33, were convicted on one count of conspiracy and five counts of poisoning patients at the Ann Arbor VA hopital with injections of the paralyzing muscle relaxant drug, Pavulon. Miss Narciso was acquitted of the one murder charge in the case.

The verdict sparked a protest demonstration by hundreds of Filipino nurses in Detroit and the resignation of one nurse employed at the hospital.

Mrs. Robinson and Pannecouk were among the 16 jurors who sat through the entire trial, only to learn just before deliberations that they, along with two others, had been designated alternates and could not participate in the verdict.

Mrs. Robinson said the jurors were defensive about the verdict and reluctant to discuss it afterwards.

"They regretted it because they really didn't want to reach that decision," she said. "They really were compassionate people.

"They didn't allow their emotions to play any part in the decision because they were afraid of being too easy for the wrong reasons."

Plastic devices curb flow of water

Saving water has become a priority for many homeowners and builders in the Northwest suburbs. Communities have passed ordinances regulating lawn sprinkling and other water usage. And the complimentary glass of water in restaurants can no longer be expected.

"More and more there's less and less," said Richard Inbinder, Evanston. "It's becoming a personal problem with people and communities."

Inbinder was in the area to discuss some of his water-saving devices. He handles Moby Dike, a patented toilet tank water-saving mechanism, and WS-1 Shower Flow Control. Both are manufactured by Watersavers, Inc., a Cleveland, Ohio, company and are not available in stores.

A STUDY BY THE U. S. Department of Interior shows that 45 per cent of household water usage involves flushing the toilet and 55 per cent is used for everything else, including showering and dishwashing. Moby Dike reduces total water consumption by about 20 per cent, according to Inbinder.

The device consists of two plastic panels, which fit into almost any vertical toilet tank except the new 3½ gallon tanks, the silent flush ones and the flush-valve types. No tools are needed for installation, said Inbinder.

The result is a reservoir of water on each side of the tank which traps one and a half to three gallons of water, reducing the volume lost with each flush. The level of water is not altered, so the same force occurs with each flush. Water circulates in the reservoirs during the refilling of the tank after each flush, so it doesn't stagnate, he said.

THE PRODUCT HAS not been tested by government research laboratories but has been evaluated by an independent firm, Stillwell Gladdings, Inc.

For years, homeowners have practiced the same water-saving principle using bricks in toilet tanks instead of plastic panels. According to Inbinder, however, the bricks tend to reduce the force of the flush, so people have to flush twice, using more water instead of less.

"Also, the action of the water in the tank will disintegrate the brick and little pieces will get into the flushing mechanism and destroy it."

The water-saving device for showers is even more simple than Moby Dike's two panels. A small cone-shaped plastic piece, the WS-1 Shower Flow Control, fits into the shower head, reducing the amount of water flowing from the spigot. Inbinder says several of his friends have installed the devices in their teenagers' showers and no one noticed the difference, despite the fact that water flow is cut by 30 to 50 per cent.

COMPANY STATISTICS report that shower flow of water is reduced to about 3½ gallons per minute.

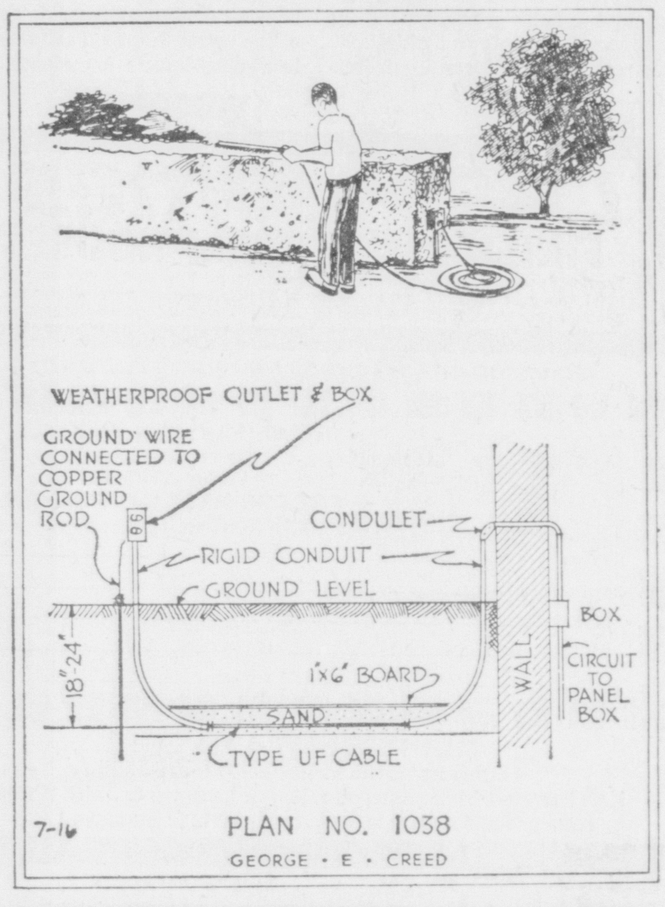
Cost for the Moby Dike is $4.95 plus tax; for the shower device, it's 65 cents, plus tax.

Inbinder admitted that the market for such items has blossomed. Contractors and development managers are surveying the hundreds of types available and installing them and communities are recommending purchase of these items.

"People are really concerned about this water shortage," said Inbinder. "And they want to do something about it."

RICHARD INBINDER, Evanston, distributes water-saving devices for toilets and showers. This year he sold about 700 Moby Dikes for toilets to Illinois residents, mostly in the northwest suburbs, during month-long period before July 11.

How to bring electricity outside



George Creed

It's your landscape

With the advent of electric hedge trimmers, edgers, grass whips and mowers, an out-of-doors source of electricity is not only convenient, it is a time-saver as well.

To obtain this convenience takes a little work, but its installation with the proper materials should last for many years.

While it is possible to connect into an existing electrical circuit in your house, a better plan is to run a separate circuit to feed your outdoor outlet. If you don't feel qualified to do this, employ an electrician. The remainder of the installation is so simple you will not need aid.

THE MATERIALS involved are available in any well-stocked electrical supply store. The box on the wall is simply a junction box fitted with a switch enabling you to turn the current to the outdoor fixture on and off.

To bend rigid conduit curves such as those shown in the plan you will need a bending gadget that you should be able to rent from a tool rental firm. Wherever you find it necessary to join two pieces of conduit together you can do this with couplings that fit over the pieces to be joined.

The 18-to 24-inch burial depth is protection in case any digging is done over the line. A further measure of protection is the one inch by six inch board laid directly over the line. Type UF cable is approved for underground use and this should be one piece be-

Sales office gives clue to home quality

A good way to estimate the quality of the home you're buying is to look carefully around the builder's sales office, advises William A. Maybrook, vice president of Lexington Development Corp.

Together with First Federal Corp., a subsidiary of First Federal Savings & Loan, Chicago, Lexington Development Corp. developed New England Village, a community of single family homes on Barrington Road in Schaumburg Township.

Maybrook has compiled a prospective homebuyer checklist that includes several ways in which a reputable builder attempts to meet the basic buyer needs of information, value and confidence in the builder.

Negative answers to any of the following questions may indicate the builder's lack of attention to detail in homebuilding and an insensitivity to buyer needs:

- Are you comfortable when entering the sales office? Is it easy to move around in and arranged in good taste?
- Is there a specific display area? Does it include maps, plats, standard features found in each home, a cutaway of a model showing construction and the builder's own history telling of his reputation in the industry?
- Is there adequate space to accommodate a full-time sales staff?
- Is the reception area neat, inviting and full of informational material about the homes you may consider purchasing?
- Are the sales staff within easy reach for supportive information; yet not overly aggressive in an effort to make a quick sale?

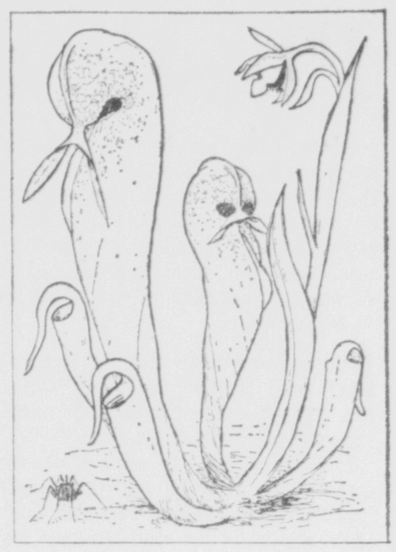
Carnivorous houseplants exotic but hard to grow

Mary B. Good

Potting shed



It used to bother me when my insect-eating plants croaked three years in a row when the warm weathtr hit.

I'd put them outdoors in the summer with the porch light burning at night to attract bugs to keep them fed. This was surely easier than trapping fruit flies in the winter. Furthermore, I always hated sharing ground beef with them. My dog should eat so well!

I wrote to the bulb company several times questioning the cause of death, but never got a satisfactory anser until I finally pressed. Yes, I was fulfilling all the cultural requirements — pebble drainage, sour, acidy soil, peat mossy conditions (in good soi, insect-eaters will wither and die), distilled water, no fertilizer, two hours of sunlight a day, 80 per cent humidity, even live ants (from the kitchen cabinets) every seven to ten days or so — all the comforts of the swamp.

FINALLY, I GOT my answer. Carnivorous plants can't take heat. In the winter the temperature never gets over 55 or 60 in the house, but in the summer it bakes.

So these pampered plants now grow in an air-conditioned north room without the benefit of a summer vacation outdoors.

Insect-eating plants are not easy to grow, and that's why some of us like to tackle them.

Of the 500-plus species of carnivorous plants in the world, the best known is the venus fly-trap (Dionaea), endemic to North Carolina. The fascination of Venus is the ability to observe the trigger movement of the plant snapping shut on a victim. For two centuries, researchers have studied the fly-trap. It has no nerves, no tendons, no muscles to contract the trap. But it is known that the black bristles on the plant's lobes are trigger signals for the snap trap.

MORE INTERESTING than the fly-trap is the great variety of ways other types of insect-eating plants get their food.

The Sundew (Drocera), for example, looks like a patch of glittering jewels on the damp ground — sticky dewdrops. Sundew gives off a sickly sweet smell irresistible to ants and other insects that get stuck in the sundew tentacles.

A personal favorite of mine is the Pitcher plant (Sarracenia purpurea) which employs the pitfall technique as a trap. The Pitcher plant has deep purple veins, exudes a sweet perfume to lure insects and has dozens of tiny, white hairs inside its collar that curve downward like the prongs of a claw. An insect investigating this plant slides down the rows of hairs and drowns in the well of water at the base, after which it is digested by the plant.

EASIEST OF ALL PITCHER plants to grow — not that any of them are easy — is the cobra plant (Darlingtonia californica), which is always available at the Chicago Flower and Garden Show in the spring each year. The Cobra has a spiral, snake-like appearance with a hooded dome, upward curving hairs growing along the Cobra fangs, and contains a pitfall.

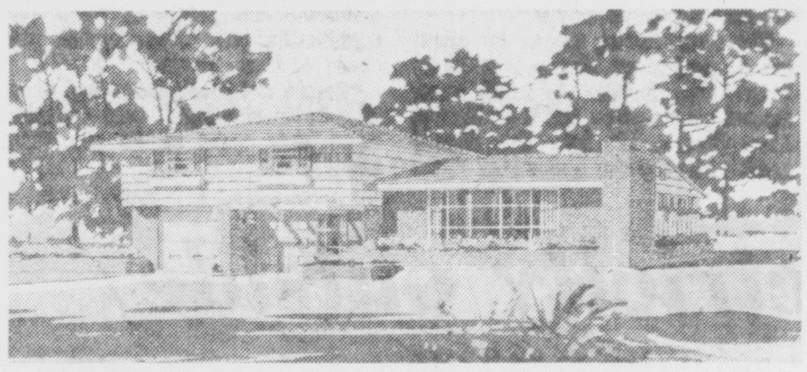
Two mail order sources for insect-eating plants, if you can't get them locally, include: Sun Dew Environment, Box 503, Boston, Mass. 02215, which carries some that are rare and unavailable elsewhere; Peter Pauls Nursery, Canandaigue, N. Y. 14424, with 50 species of carnivorous plants.

The ranks of people who specialize in growing carnivorous plants as an avocation are a select few — little more than 300. But to have a couple of plants around just for fun tests anybody's talents and expands the realm of the exotic, bizarre and unusual in a houseplant-lover's experience.

Split level a space-saving home

Jean-Paul Saint-Michel

Home of your own



This trim home contains only slightly over 1,000 square feet of space and should not be too costly to build. However, its living space is not at all restrictive, plus it has a number of unique design features which make it particularly interesting.

The exterior is well proportioned and blends a pleasant mixture of wood shingles and brick. A brick wall, pierced for decoration, separates the front entrance from the garage doors.

Inside, traffic circulation works well and will appeal to many prospective new home owners. Entrances and exits to the lower level recreation room keep traffic out of the living level. Access to the lavatory from outdoors is an advantage, and it is handy to the recreation room.

ONE UNIQUE FEATURE is the balcony arrangement at the kitchen breakfast area.

Let us take a look at the advantages of a split design over a one-story house. Imagine what would happen if a giant hand pushed down on the bedroom wing to bring its floor level to the living room floor:

The basement space would increase to almost twice its present sufficient size.

The garage space would be gone, requiring another structure to be built on grade.

Foyer would be gone, requiring either taking 64 square feet out of the living room to replace it, making the house larger to accommodate it, or just not having the advantage of a foyer.

THE COAT CLOSET would be gone, necessitating the elimination of a becroom closet in order to convert it into a coat closet.

The recreation room could move into the basement but would require a 12-step flight of stairs instead of four; would lose the advantage of floor-to-ceiling windows for natural lifhg; and would lose advantage of direct outdoor on-grade access to the room, which is great for localizing traffic and keeping dirt out of the rest of the house.

The lavatory could move into the basement but would not serve as efficiently as in this location. To be handy to the kitchen, outdoors and garage it would have to move up to first floor, necessitating increasing the square footage of the house.

The kitchen would not have the charm of the balcony nor the advantage of mother being able to supervise the children in the recreation room without leaving the kitchen.

Bedrooms would be on the same level with the living and service areas — not nearly as efficient zoning as in the split.

tween the junction box and the outlet. To avoid laying the cable on stones or other sharp objects that might damage it, bed it in sand as illustrated.

YOU WILL, OF COURSE, locate your weatherproof outlet and box in a place most convenient for use but avoid, if you can, putting it in an open lawn area where it could become an obstacle when mowing lawn.

The weatherproof outlet (2 outlets in sketch) should be an approved grounding type, requiring a three-prong plug. The sketch also shows a ground wire from the outlet box to a copper rod in the ground. This is a very important and necessary safety precaution.

Q. Can you grow peonies from seed?

A. You can, but it is a very slow process.

Q. Do you recommend a fertilizer high in nitrogen for roses?

A. No. If you use such a fertilizer you will get lots of leaves but comparatively few flowers.

'A hassle-free room'

Keep furniture simple

Whether you call it interim decorating or instant decorating . . . the idea's valid. Sometimes we work too hard trying to solve room arrangements. Perhaps it would be better to follow the lead suggested in today's illustration and get it all together!

The setting was created by Patti McDermott of Barker Bros. design team in Los Angeles. Barker's is a phenomenon in the industry, with about seven stories of home furnishings. When you remember that most stores that size carry personal clothing, toys, books and a wide assortment of merchandise, you realize that the folks at Barkers' have learned a few things about interiors.

The space photographed was furnished in a rather sparse way, when you are used to end tables and lounge chairs and other free-standing items. But Patti opted for two important directions.

FIRST, SHE CHOSE a system of seating by Selig that reduces the need for extra chairs and ottomans. Second, she concentrated all the needs of a living environment into one good storage wall.

The only "typical" item added is the coffee table, and that is slightly larger than usual, because it serves for sit-down (on the floor, too) snacking. The commodious table is made of wood and rattan and has a handsome parquet-effect top with picture frame sections.

There's really everything in this space one would need. Lighting dosn't show here, but Patti placed some good floor lamps in back of the playpen sectional. And that large ottoman section looks like a connected part of the seating, but can be moved around whenever more bodies require it.

Music system, television, books, art, even a bar for refreshments are housed on that storage wall. So, one wonders why we can't manage more orderly and hassle-free enjoyment in other rooms of the home.

ACTUALLY, WHAT might start out as instant decorating could become the best long-team solution. It's almost like having an architect or fine carpenter design custom-cabinetry and built-in furniture. But in this case you pays your money and you takes the merchandise home with you . . . or almost!

There are similar solutions for bedrooms, but one should work the bed into the storage wall for real comfort. The television set could then be set on a bench at the foot of the bed, with remote controls in the storage unit.

Individual pieces of the playpen seating also could be moved into a bedroom to create a private hideaway should the house expand or the family move on to bigger and better quarters.

According to our forecasts, however, the expansions are continuing to happen right where you are. So, furnishings like these are a good investment . . . they're so willing to be shoved around!

(c) 1977, Los Angeles Times Syndicate

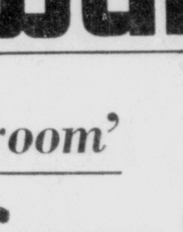
Your home



THOUGH SPARSELY filled, this living space meets all needs through use of two systems, Playpen seating by Selig and a storage wall. The extras that clutter a room are eliminated.

Two summer parties for Hadassah

Two summer parties are planned this month by Henrietta Szold Hadassah, whose members live in the entire Northwest suburbs.

The Hadassah women are invited to pack a lunch, round up their families and join the group for a picnic Sunday, July 24, at Daniel Wright Forest Preserves. The fun begins at 10:30 a.m.

Those wishing to attend should call Sarelle Povitsky, 259-1139, or Esther Weinstein, 541-6236.

Another summer event is the annual potluck lunch and card party, set for July 27 at noon at the home of Stephanie Frank, Mount Prospect. Donation is $3, plus a salad, mold or cake.

New Year's cards and the Hadassah cookbook will be available. Mrs. Frank is taking reservations at 593-7933.

Tri-Delts give $4500

A check for $4,500 was presented to Northwestern University Dental School's Cleft Lip and Palate Institute by the Chicago Area Alumnae Council of Delta Delta Delta sorority June 22.

The donation is in honor of Marily Castle, Palatine, former president of the Council, who died last year of cancer.

The Cleft Lip and Palate Institute opened in 1946 and today has a staff of specialists in the fields of speech pathology, plastic surgery, orthodontics, prosthodontics, otolaryngology, pediatrics and social service.

Picnic for BPW

Barrington Area Business and Professional Women's Club will hold a combined business meeting and picnic supper Thursday, July 28, at Lakewood Forest Preserve, Route 176 and Fairfield road. The meeting is scheduled for 6:30 p.m. followed by a 7:30 program.

Jerry Soesbe of Lake County Forest Preserve and J. Harvey Veersteeg of the Lake County Museum will present the program.

Women employed in business or the professions interested in joining the club may call Janet Terrenga at 381-6663 days or 381-0822 evenings for further information.

The National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs will hold its annual convention in Louisville, Ky., July 24-28. Foundation chairman Rita Cooper and second vice president Alice Nance will represent the Barrington Club.

Happenings

AOPi in convention

Three Northwest Suburban Alpha Omicron Pi alumnae were delegates to the 52nd international AOPi convention held in June at Camelback Inn, Scottsdale, Ariz.

Peg Frerk, president of the area chapter, was international regional meetings chairman. Barbara Taubenheim, another delegate, is adviser to the collegiate chapter at Northern Illinois University, and Nancy Clark, third delegate, is a regional director.

During the convention meetings, Nancy Clark was appointed regional vice president of the sorority. In this position she will be responsible for the operation of the 15 collegiate chapters and 21 alumnae chapters in Region IV, which includes Illinois, Indiana and Kentucky.

Although Northwest Suburban alumnae do not hold regular meetings in the summer, three activities were planned to keep members in touch. June 26 was Aim for Arthritis Day, a golf outing benefit for the Arthritis Foundation. July 12 was the chapter's summer luncheon at Hedon Place, Schaumburg, and Aug. 20 a tennis party is planned for members and husbands.

Alumnae living in the area may call Diane Pellettiere at 359-7358 for further information on AOPi.

Next on the agenda

Fifth Wheelers, 7:45 p.m. Sunday at Trinity Lutheran Church, Algonquin and Wolf roads, Des Plaines. Sarah Bassett will discuss metaphysics. 437-4408 or 827-7122.

O'Hare 10 Chapter, American Businesswomen's Association, 7 p.m. dinner meeting Tuesday at Old Orchard Country Club, Mount Prospect. Mrs. Marge Leahy of American Airlines Kiwi staff to speak on "Travel Go Lightly." 279-3600 ext. 201 days, 593-7721 evenings.

Arlington Heights LaLeche League, 8 p.m. Tuesday in home of Mrs. Ross Spencer. Breastfeeding counseling, Mrs. Modesta Schiemann, 824-7153.

Agape, for recently divorced or separated persons, 7:30 p.m. Tuesday in First Presbyterian Church hall, 302 N. Dunton, Arlington Heights. Study of chapters in "Growing through Divorce." 392-7821 or 253-0492.

The doctor says

Diabetic asks advice to control sickness

I have diabetes mellitus and I have lost my job because of a gradual deterioration physically. Every time I tried to put in a good day's work I had a reaction from either low blood sugar or insulin I had taken. The amount of insulin was decided that morning on the basis of a Clinitest tablet and urine sample.

Because of the loss of weight and a general weakened condition I have increased my diet and insulin intake which seems to work if I have complete freedom to adjust physical activity according to each day's needs.

I have no other choice but to accept the fact that this is not going to change, which is difficult. The fact that I have always expected to work for a living has served as a mental block to reality. I am only 48 years old. The financial situation will not let me forget that either.

Why isn't diabetes mellitus given a different distinction from more manageable diabetes and why aren't people more informed?

I would also like to know more about a possible improvement in blood sugar monitoring. I think it is referred to as continuous monitoring.

Diabetes mellitus is diabetes mellitus whether it is mild or severe. Diabetes mellitus may occur early in life in some people and much later in others as the natural course of disease in different people. That is one reason why it is hard to determine the hereditary pattern of diabetes.

I am sending you two issues of The Health Letter, numbers 3-10, (Diabetes: The Sweet Sickness) and 3-11 (Diabetes: Diagnosis, Prevention and Management). It will help you with some of your questions. Others who want these two issues can send 50 cents for each with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for mailing to P.O. Box 1551, Radio City Station, New York, N.Y. 10019.

The natural production of insulin by a normal person is such that more insulin is released when the blood sugar gets too high and less when it falls. There is no way you can really duplicate this with insulin medications. That is why the diet and also the physical activity have to be regulated. When physical activity is expected to increase, it is usally necessary to decrease the insulin.

I WOULD SUGGEST that you avoid any of the foods that release glucose rapidly, specifically all concentrated sweets. You should try to increase the uncooked vegetables in your diet. There is evidence that uncooked foods are better for diabetics since they decrease the insulin needs and smooth out the peaks and valleys of blood sugar. Be sure to have plenty of bulk in your meals.

There are studies in progress on using continuously monitored or sensed blood sugar levels and releasing insulin in relation to the level at that moment. This should be an important advance when it is available. By providing more constant control of the blood glucose levels it may prevent diabetic neuropathy and eye changes.

Also there is hope that transplanted islets of Langerhans where insulin is produced will soon be possible. When that technique — now used experimentally in dogs — is perfected for human use it would provide a means of curing diabetes entirely.

Dr. Lamb will answer representative letters of general interest in his column.

Shrubbery near house should be foot away

Dear Roberta: We recently had our house exterior painted. I'm still in shock over the cost. I thought I was saving energy and expenses for heating and cooling by surrounding the house with greenery. Obviously, I overdid it because the shrubbery brushing against windows and other parts rotted them out. All the wood and metalwork had to be scraped or replaced. Hope this warning saves others from the same incredibly costly experience.—Frank J. Lewis.

Sorry you paid so dearly for your attempt at energy conservation. But thank you for the reminder that shrubbery should be trimmed at least a foot away from any building. Greenery retains moisture for many days after a heavy rain, and for weeks after a snow.

Dear Roberta: Your readers should profit from this packrat tip. Never throw away a straw broom just because heavy use has left it with little more than a lopsided point at one end. It's no good for regular floor cleanups, but it's invaluable for cleaning corners, edges and places that vacuum cleaners can't reach.

There's no better way I know of than moistening the ends of these seemingly done-for brooms to drag out pet hairs which seem to be most prevalent on steps.—Mrs. George Blucker, Sr.

Dear Roberta: Friends and others used to ask me for translations of my handwritten letters. Now I try to type as much of my correspondence as I can. But my typing isn't perfect, and to produce a neat letter I have to use those little papers to type out mistakes. They're so small they're next to impossible to find when I need them most. With all the writing you do, how do you keep tab of those little tabs?—Mrs. Marcella Guilbert.

All you need to do is to cut off the bottom of a small envelope, attach it to the front of your typewriter with cellophane tape and place those tabs in it.

Dear Roberta: Here's another solution to the problem of long jewelry chains tangling together. We've screwed a circular men's tie rack into each of our girls' closets. One necklace per bar and there's never a tangle.—Mrs. Tom Dahl.

Mr. and Mrs. Mark Hendershot

Juanita Sharratt– Mark Hendershot

A canopied deck alongside the outdoor pool at the Wesley Sharratt home in Arlington Heights was the setting for the marriage June 18 of Juanita Sharratt and Mark Hendershot of Mount Prospect.

After the 4 p.m. wedding ceremony the couple crossed a bridge spanning the pool to greet their 140 guests, who had been witnessing the ceremony from around the pool. The Rev. Dennis Miller of Lake Zurich performed the rites, and the bride's brother Jeff played the organ.

Meanwhile, a helicopter hovered above the festivities for aerial pictures of the nuptials.

JUANITA'S WEDDING gown of white satin and lace and her bouffant veil were handmade by her mother, Mrs. Wesley Sharratt. A ring of yellow roses and yellow and white daisies held her veil in place. Her flowers were also yellow roses with yellow and white daisies.

The bridal attendants were gowned in yellow daisy-print halter dresses and carried yellow daisies with white baby's breath. Julie Domas, Arlington Heights, was maid of honor, with Mary Ann Keelan, Arlington Heights, Pam Miller, Prospect Heights, Beth Reaver, Mount Prospect, and the bride's sister Jessie as bridesmaids.

MARK, SON of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Hendershot, had his brother Kurt as best man. Groomsmen included Larry Creamer, Ray Frontzak and Brian Gavre, all of Mount Prospect; Garry Tonneson, Northbrook; and the bride's brother Jack.

A garden reception followed, hosted by Mr. and Mrs. Sharratt.

Juanita and Mark are now at home in Rolling Meadows afer a week in the Pocono Mountains of Pennsylvania and a week camping in Florida. The bride works for Montgomery Ward at Randhurst and the groom for Frama in Addision.

Both graduated from Prospect High School and Juanita is now attending Harper College. Mark also studied at Harper.

Brides-to-be

Van Haften-Towey

Mr. and Mrs. James Van Haften of Arlington Heights announce the engagement of their daughter, Debora Lee, to Terence Thomas Towey, son of the John Toweys of Buffalo Grove. A September wedding is planned.

Since graduating from Hersey High School in '75, Debbie is working for Union Oil Co., Schaumburg. Her fience graduated the same year from Maine West high and is employed by Colonial Chevrolet in Schaumburg.

Reynolds-Milke

The engagement and approaching marriage of Sally Rae Reynolds and John L. Milke Jr. is announced by the bride-elect's parents, Mrs. Robert H. Sander of Palatine and Raymond Reynolds of Wheaton. John is the son of Mrs. Ken Kehe, Des Plaines, and John Milke, Chicago. The wedding takes place in August.

A graduate of Palatine High School and Harper College, Sally is an executive secretary at the O'Hare Hilton Hotel. John graduated from Conant High and is head night auditor at the hotel.

Weddings

Pamela Regas-Gary Lyp

A Mount Prospect couple, Pamela Regas and Gary Lyp, who met at a vacation lodge in Wisconsin three years ago, were married June 5 at 3:30 p.m. in St. Raymond Catholic Church.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Hanley and the groom the son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Lyp.

The bride's two sisters were among her attendants, Victoria Regas as maid of honor and Cynthia Fish, Clarendon Hills, as bridesmaid. The groom's sister Jodi along with Kathy Amstead and Fawn Krake of Mount Prospect were also bridesmaids.

GARY CHOSE Guy Maychszak, Mount Prospect, as best man. Serving as groomsmen were his brother Wayne, the bride's brother-in-law, Vern Fish, Bryon Finger of Palatine and Tom Callard, Arlington Heights.

The couple greeted 175 guests later at Allegretti's Four Horsemen in Rosemont.

Mr. and Mrs. Gary Lyp

Both are working in Des Plaines, Pam at Holy Family Hospital and Gary employed by Wisconsin Dietary Management at Maryville Academy.

She is a graduate of Hersey High School and attended Harper College. Gary graduated from Prospect High and also attended Harper.

Club offers school aid

Two scholarships, $150 each, will be awarded by the Junior Woman's Club of Des Plaines to qualified Des Plaines women who are returning to school.

Applications are available in the Financial Aid Offices of Harper and Oakton Colleges, or they may be obtained by telephoning 824-6676 or 827-6567. Deadline for completing the applications is Aug. 6.

Business briefs

$3.3 billion gained in May inventories

Business inventories increased by $3.3 billion in May, equaling the largest gain of 1977, the Commerce Dept. said Friday. The department also said sales reversed a downward trend by increasing 0.2 per cent in May. Sales had dropped 0.6 per cent in April. May's impressive 1 per cent jump in inventories — stocks on shelves and in warehouses ready for sale — equaled the $3.3 billion gain registered in March and was considerably above the revised $2.5 billion increase for April. The last time that a larger increase was recorded was in June, 1976, when inventories rose by $3.4 billion, the department said. The gains in both inventories and sales were an indication that the business community was maintaining its confidence that the economy would remain in its growth pattern in coming months. The May statistics showed that inventories climbed $2.1 billion at the manufacturing level, $129 million at wholesale and $1.1 billion at retail.

'Working woman myths prevail'

Myths still dog the 45 million working women who make up 38 per cent of the U.S. labor force, according to a recent media research study. Ketchum, Macleod & Grove, Inc., which conducted the study, found most people believe working women significantly have narrowed the gap between their own salaries and the higher income of working men. But in reality the average working woman's salary now is 57 per cent of men's income, down from 60 per cent a decade ago, the advertising agency said. Another popular misconception maintains that women are actively pursuing careers without being burdened by children. In fact, more than 50 per cent of all worknng women have a child at home, and the number of on-the-job mothers is climbing steadily, the study reported.

Savings groups to battle banks

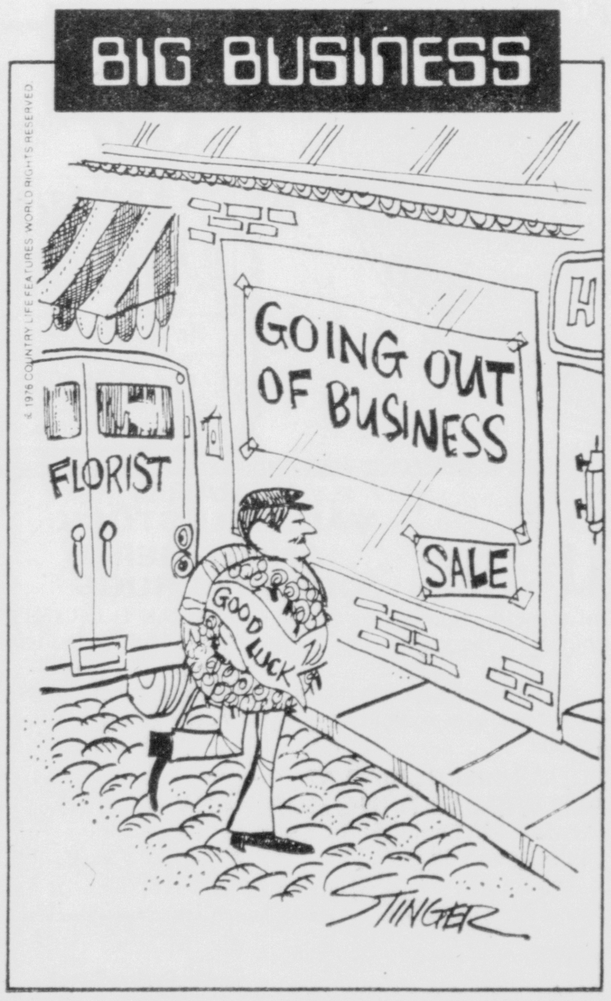
The nation's savings and loans industry, the primary source of home mortage funds, said Friday it plans to mount a counter-offensive to fight efforts of commercial banks attempting to equalize savings account interest rates. "We do not intend to stand idly by and watch how this battle turns out," said John Hardin, president of the United States League of Savings Associations. "We have some strong allies on our side." Legislation has been "introduced in Congress to scrap the one-quarter of 1 per cent interest rate advantage that savings and loans currently hold over commercial banks. The American Bankers Assn. has told its members they must prepare for a "fight" to eliminate the interest rate differential.

House panel OKs gas price lid

President Carter's plan to keep federal controls on natural gas prices has taken a big step toward law. The House Commerce Committee gave him a big victory Thursday by approving his plan, rejecting proposals to phase out controls and let prices seek their own level. The committee sent the non tax portions of Carter's energy program to a special energy committee that will put them with the tax portions and prssent the whole package to the house in August. The tax portions, chiefly levies on industrial use of oil and gas, on crude oil, and on cars with low gasoline mileage, have been completed by the Ways and Means Committee.

Task force on glass safety

The government Friday announced formation of a task force to study more fully the safety of glasses decorated with glazes containing lead. In the meantime, the Food and Drug Administration and Environmental Protection Agency urged care in the use of these glasses by small children. Although there is no evidence from FDA tests that the lead from the decorative glazes on the outside of the glasses can contaminate food or liquid inside, the EPA said testing did show that lead could be released when the glasses were subjected to repeated washings. "It's not new glasses that are the problem," said an EPA spokesman. "It's glasses that have been used maybe a couple of years. You know how the shiny surface turns kind of dull. That's when the lead can leach out." The spokesman said the American Glassware Assn. and the Owens-Illinois Glass Co. tried to have announcement of the task force and the caution blocked with a federal court order but were turned down Friday.



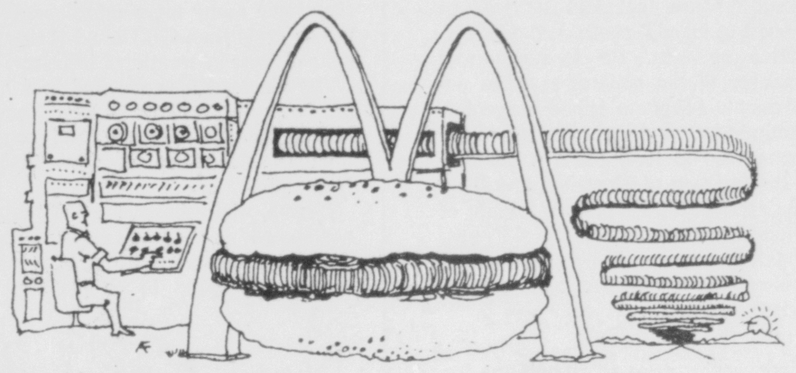
From cow to bun, McDonald's hamburgers are computerized

by DAVID ANABLE

Cohoes, N.Y. — In serried ranks, six abreast, onward, onward, march the five hundred, into the jaws of . . . well, you and me, actually.

Here at the Equity Meat Corporation's shiny new hamburger plant, computerized, stainless steel machines send exactly 540 beef patties per machine per minute — 2 million per plant per day — marching past the "patty-pickers" (who smooth out the overlaps), dashing into the ice-steaming freezer tunnel, and dropping off the ends of the conveyor belts with military precision — click, clack, click, clack.

And Equity funnels every one of these precision-made patties directly to McDonald's, America's No. 1 fast-food chain.



NOT THE TINIEST fly flits around the cool, cavernous plant, where the carcasses of 450 cattle a day are ground into one-tenth of a pound, all-beef hamburgers. The computer, with its flashing lights and dials, ensures that each identical 4¾-inch patty contains precisely the "right" amounts of moisture (65 per cent), protein (17 per cent), and fat (18 per cent).

Later, the gung-ho graduates of "H.U." — Hamburger University, McDonald's training school in Elk Grove Village — will grill the still-frozen pads according to their uniform, second-by-second, instructions. With a dash of seasoning (make that 1½ teaspoons of pepper to just one pound of salt) the patty cooks and shrinks and — surprise, surprise — slips exactly into its 4-inch diameter bun.

Lo, the Big Mac . . . a programmed product of low price and unvarying high quality, the triumph of science and technology over the ancient art of cooking. The genius of a chef's whim has been whittled into a well-drilled commercial operation. And what family can argue with the bunper-dollar benefits?

Last year, Keystone Foods Corp., which owns Equity Meat, ground out more than a billion burgers for McDonald's — about 45 per cent of the chain's voracious demand.

A NEW McDONALD'S a day is the pace of openings in the United States. The big "M" now also can be found in 22 other countries, from Japan to Australia, from Britain to South Africa. And the sign above each store currently reads : "Over 22 billion sold."

To make uniformity still more profitably uniform, Keystone Foods is moving into the cattle-rearing business. From calf to customer, from hoof to paper plate, the meat-producing process will be laboratory-controlled.

"Vertical integration" it's called in business jargon. For 250,000 Holstein cows and steers mooing in the Texas panhandle it means a regulated diet for 12 to 14 months.

Meanwhile, outside this new $3 million processing plant, the Stars and Stripes rise up the pole at dawn and subside at dusk under the watchful eye of the computer. As for any wasted meat inside, there is none; it's turned into soap — to wash one's hands, perhaps, after a burger snack.

Energy from garbage no rubbish

Louis Rukeyser

Are we burying each day a potential major supplier of U.S. energy needs — by failing to recycle our garbage? Or is that claim itself merely rubbish?

The controversy is growing — odoriferously — around the country, as many cities report encouraging successes but others encounter setbacks that spur angry criticisms. At stake is the future of municipal recycling programs designed to recover such resources as energy and scrap steel from garbage, while conserving shrinking landfill space.

Supporters of such programs maintain that locked in U.S. garbage today, largely being buried, is the energy equivalent of 6 per cent of the electricity currently being used in the country — the equivalent, that is, of 250 million barrels of oil or 60 million tons of coal each year. That's a lot of waste going to waste.

Seven cities already are mining their garbage for energy and discarded materials that can be reused rather than buried. Experience has shown that every pound of garbage contains about 5,000 BTU's of energy. That's a remarkably high yield: an equal amount of coal would produce less than twice as much energy. What's more, experts insist that you don't have to hold your nose when you use this garbage byproduct; refuse-derived fuel is described as clean-burning and nonpolluting.

It sounds like a prosperous paradise for Oscar the Grouch (the "Sesame Street" character who lives in a garbage can). Why, then, are some cities holding back? Two well-publicized setbacks, widely interpreted as outright failures, seem to have eroded official and public confidence.

IN BALTIMORE, shakedown tests of a $16 million pyrolysis plant that "bakes" garbage in an oxygen-poor atmosphere to generate gas uncovered mechanical and air-pollution problems. The designer-operator withdrew from the project after a year. The city reportedly still has confidence in the system, however, feels that most of the major problems have been corrected and plans to continue running the unit.

A less happy ending, from the standpoint of the emerging technology, came in St. Louis. There, after a three-year test generally regarded as successful, the local utility contracted to build a $70 million refuse-to-energy plant. But citizens of two communities caused a two-year delay by suing to prevent location of refuse transfer stations in their neighborhoods. Meanwhile, inflation increased the costs and the utility became financially entangled in a nuclear project. Result: the refuse-to-energy plant was dropped.

But Thomas Willson, senior vice president of the American Iron and Steel Institute, insists that neither city's experience deserves the negative publicity it has received. "The Baltimore plant problems were caused by a too-ambitious scale-up from a 35-tons-per-day plant to a 1,000-tons-per-day plant," he told me. "The concept still is valid. In St. Louis, selfish community opposition and financial difficulties scuttled a sound project; however, other organizations are now considering implementation."

WHATEVER YOUR view of the reactions of these communities' citizens, there do seem to be some authentic success stories elsewhere. For example, technology similar to that developed for St. Louis is being used today in Chicago, Milwaukee and Ames, Iowa. And fully 36 cities currently are recovering steel cans from their solid waste; the annual total recovered is expected to reach 5 billion in 1977 and 12 billion by 1980. That's quite a heap of recyclable steel — not to mention between $5 and $10 million in revenue for those 36 cities this year.

Willson talks glowingly of the day when resource-recovery facilities have been constructed to process all our municipal solid wastes — a day when virtually every steel can in the country would be recycled, and hard-pressed cities would get $1 billion a year out of it. Trashing never sounded so lucrative.

"Resource recovery is too important on several levels to be sabotaged by critics," Wilson said. "We don't want to sweep any problems under the rug, but the big story is the valuable raw materials and energy that can be reclaimed from solid waste, and the 90 per cent savings in landfill usage these plants make possible."

Anyhow, Oscar is smiling.

Eastern sets unlimited travel fare

A ticket on Eastern Airlines proposed unlimited travel fare will take Chicagoans to as many cities as they want to see for only $299.

The proposed fare would allow two or more persons traveling together to hop from city to city during a 21-day period. Although Eastern has only a limited number of flights from O'Hare, to Florida and the Southeast, it has connections in 104 other cities that would give Chicagoans access to Mexico, the Carribbean, the West Coast and Canada.

"You could go almost anywhere you want to go," said airlines spokesman Marilyn Dixon.

TRIPS MUST BE planned 14 days in advance and there must be at least three stop son each trip. Children can fly for $199, but at least two youngsters must fly with adult supervision to qualify for the fare.

The Eastern proposal, now awaiting approval from the Civil Aeronautics Board, is the latest in a series of special fares announced to attract new passengers to the airlines. The fares appear to be in response to a government call for deregulation in the industry.

"We want people riding the planes," Ms. Dixon said, noting there are now empty seats on many of Eastern's planes. "It is adding people to the flights."

The proposed fare is the first time a major airline has attempted to provide unlimited travel at a flat fee.

Smaller airlines have offered similar plans on a regional basis, an Eastern spokesman said.

The plan would be similar to a Eurail pass on major European railroads. Both Amtrak and the major U.S. bus companies already offer an unlimited travel package.

If approved by the CAB, the new fare will go into effect Sept. 11 and last at least one year. The fare would not apply to travel during the holidays.

$1 billion in losses from blackout

by LEROY POPE

NEW YORK (UPI) — A power blackout in New York City, causing losses which could exceed $1 billion, posted important questions for the business world this week.

Puzzled Europeans said it couldn't happen in their countries because they have many more interdependent power grids than the United States in spite of their international frontiers.

The blackout also resulted in a bitter controversy between New York's Mayor Abraham Beame and chairman Charles Luce of Consolidated Edison Co.

Beame, who accused Luce of "gross negligence" in the years since the last massive power blackout hit New York in 1965, appeared to be planning a huge lawsuit against the utility.

LUCE CLAIMED his company was being "convicted before the investigation." He blamed the blackout on lightning that struck a key transformer setup in Westchester County and called it an "Act of God."

But the Wall Street Journal published a roundup of comment from other utility executives around the country, some of whom plainly questioned Luce's conclusions. They implied that Edison may not have set up adequate backup arrangements and failed to "shed load quickly enough." Some utility companies conceded that the New York blackout coud force them to make new studies of the possible vulnerability of their own systems.

Around 3,300 persons were arrested for looting. Thousands of shops were totally stripped and one Pontiac dealer had 50 cars stolen. Many shops also were set afire. A large proportion of the shopkeepers were uninsured and ruined unless they get government help.

Combined insured and uninsured losses to the looters and fires were expected to total hundreds of millions of dollars. Business and personal losses from the power outage could exceed $1 billion, according to unofficial estimates.

One result of the blackout is expected to be a big increase in demand for standby motor-generator sets for individual businesses, institutions and buildings.

OTHER BUSINESS developments this week:

- President Carter's decision not to deregulate the price of natural gas was sustained by the House commerce committee.
- President Carter disappointed some segments of the insurance industry by deciding to support the bill to set up federal minimum standards for state no-fault automobile insurance laws.
- The board of governors of the Postal Service tentatively decided to raise the business letter rate to 16 cents but to leave the private letter rate at 13 cents.
- The President was reported planning to effect a further cut of $1 billion in defense expenditures as a result of his recent decision not to put the controversial B1 bomber in production.
- The Pentagon announced it would put Boeing and General Dynamics, two of the country's big defense firms, in competition to develop and produce the cruise missile as a replacement for the B-1.
- President Carter pressed Congress to raise the minimum wage by 35 cents an hour to $2.65 and House Democrats began a drive to eliminate the "tip exemption" for motels, restaurants and similar employers from the minimum wage law. The restaurant industry claims loss of the tip exemption would force it to boost prices disastrously.

New Keough Fund code not publicized

Moneywise

by Robert Edwards

We are self-employed and have established a Keogh Fund for retirement. My husband is 58. I understand that by switching to a "defined benefit" plan from our current "defined contribution" plan, we can set aside more than the $7,500 limit. Where can we find out how to do this?

—J.K.

Included along with the increase to $7,500 maximum contribution for Keogh plans in the 1974 pension reform act is a little-known provision that enables self-employed individuals to set up a plan for a specific monthly pension — a "defined benefit" plan. If the self-employyed person's income justifies, payments exceeding $7,500 would be tax free. However, the Internal Revenue Service has not yet translated new code provisions into workable regulations, and the "defined benefit" plan is not as well known or practiced as "defined contribution" plans. The law is on the books, and knowledgeable pension plan experts have instituted defined benefit plans without IRS regulations. This can be tricky, however. A recent check with the IRS indicates the regulations will be issued, and when they are, they will be publicized. No date was indicated.

I am a widow and will be 64 in July. Although I retired early, I work 20 days/year to earn $2,750. My husband's social security benefit would be $290/month. What are the pros and cons of taking his social security benefits now rather than waiting until I am 65?

—B.S.

Your earnings of $2,750 are under the $3,000/year current limit and would not affect SS benefits. If you elect to take SS benefits one year early, your payments will be reduced, 19/40 of 1 per cent for each month you retire before 65. Social security benefits are figured to break even after about 17½ years if you had retired at 60. That is, if you start withdrawing reduced benefits at age 60, you would be money ahead for the first 17½ years. After that, higher monthly payments will have caught up and you would be ahead in total dollars received. Important to your decision is how badly you need the money now. If you can wait, you will have more dollars per month.

On "Moneywise" for May 11 you wrote that "Any number of individual $3,000 gifts to different donees may be given tax free each year and not reported." Later, ". . . as long as gifts do not exceed $3,000 yearly." One view is that a parent could give $3,000 to each of 10 children without reporting the gifts or paying gift taxes. The later statement appears to limit gifts to $3,000 total. Please explain.

—C.W.

Brevity and an attempt to avoid legalese has again caused possible confusion. Once more — if you, as a parent, wish to give each of your 10 children $3,000 in any one year, you may do so without reporting the gifts or paying any taxes — other than applicable income taxes. Gifts are from after-tax funds. Thus, you may give a total of $3,000 as long as each gift does not exceed the $3,000 limit. Your wife may do the same. Further, donees need not be your children — or other relatives.

Best to heed Perez: cut oil use here

Hobart Rowen

WASHINGTON — What advice did he have for industrial nations worried about the price of oil? The question was put to the President of Venezuela, Carlos Andres Perez, at a meeting with the editorial board of the Washington Post.

The dapper and personable leader of one of the principal oil cartel countries had a good answer: "Before you worry about the price, you must do everything possible to cut consumption."

The gluttonous U. S. demand for oil lies behind a staggering trade deficit which is expected to total $25 billion in 1977. The volume of oil imports this year is running about 15 per cent over 1976, and the bill in dollars will be $40 billion to $43 billion, compared to a mere $5 billion in 1972.

THE REMAINDER OF the world has cut back modestly, but not the United States. OPEC oil exports to countries other than the United States will be down more than 10 per cent this year, compared to 1974. But OPEC exports to the U. S. are up 30 per cent, according to Morgan Guaranty economist Rimmer de Vries. In a way, you can say we are hooked on OPEC oil. As in the case of any addiction, the withdrawal may be painful, but necessary to survive.

And don't be lulled into a sense of security by the OPEC decision to forgo another 5 per cent price increase this year. As Perez said: "The price of oil will go up, with or without OPEC."

So far, the Carter administration has played down the significance of the trade deficit, which hit an annual rate of $28 billion in the first quarter. But is it prudent for any nation, even the strong and powerful United States to import that much more than it exports?

Even inside the administration, nagging doubts are beginning to appear. Frank Weil, an assistant commerce secretary, warned the deficit may be getting out of hand. Budget Director Bert Lance sounded a note of caution, although he defers to Treasury Sec. W. Michael Blumenthal in this area.

A $25 billion deficit on trade works out to a deficit of about $10 billion to $12 billion on the "current account," which includes earnings on services and overseas investments. That's the number the financial markets watch.

FEDERAL RESERVE Board Gov. Henry A. Wallich said the other day in a speech in Montreal that such a deficit is "not comforting" for a country "responsible for the world's principal currency." Two years ago the United States had a current account surplu of $11.5 billion.

But Blumenthal has been arguing the United States can sustain the swing into deficit "for a time" because the U. S. economy attracts an influx of oil money and speculative capital that finances it.

Besides, says the cigar-puffing secretary, when the United States runs a big deficit, it is helping to stabilize the world economy. By that he means that if the United States experiences a deficit, it gives less fortunate nations a chance to enjoy a surplus.

But the trouble with the Blumenthal thesis is that the U. S. deficit has been helping not the poor countries, but OPEC and Japan. Figures to prove it: In the first quarter, the U. S. trade deficit with OPEC was running at an annual rate of about $22 billion.

The deficit with Japan was at a rate of about $6.5 billion. Only about $1 billion represented deficits with the less-developed nations.

So the trade fix we're in primarily is the result of the unconscionable demand for oil. Take away oil, and the $25 billion deficit turns into a $20 billion surplus.

IN A SPEECH ON the House floor the othe day, Rep. Henry S. Reuss, D-Wis., said if the present trend continues, it will be perceived "as a decline in the competitive U. S. position, and thus lead to a depreciation of the dollar."

Weil makes the point, and it is a good one, that the U. S. share of manufactured goods exports peaked in 1975. That means that the offsetting surplus we've enjoyed in nonoil exports is thinning down.

Perhaps the most serious concern of all is boxcar-sized deficits exacerbate protectionist sentiment, although the chief mischief is created by a reckless OPEC pricing policy, and an equally reckless nonresponse reflected in greedy oil consumption.

There is no reason to panic, or to resort to blind protectionism or 19th Century mercantilism. The flow of Alaskan oil later this year should at least trim both the deficit with OPEC and the overall trade deficit.

But for the long haul, we better start taking President Perez advice.

The Carter administration merely has supplied some grand rhetoric about depending less on OPEC, while building up the political and economic strength of Saudi Arabia in every way. We should not only cut oil consumption and imports drastically, but get serious about the long-range potential of solar, thermal, wind and waterpower, nuclear, and every other conceivable alternative source of energy.

Listening Post devoted to teaching kids

by PAM BIGFORD

Parent-teacher conferences can be bewildering.

If a teacher tells the parents their child is having reading problems and needs work with his vowel sounds, the parents often have no idea what they can do to help.

To meet the demand for parents who want to help their children with their school work, four teachers have quit their jobs and opened the Listening Post in Buffalo Grove.

The new store in the Plaza Verde Shopping Center, Dundee and Arlington Heights roads, is filled with creative materials designed to assist adults in helping children learn.

THE BULK OF the first customers are expected to be teachers, but the store hopes to reach parents who want to become more involved with their children's education, Judy Cerman, one of the store's four owners, says.

"We'll be in the store all the time," Mrs. Cerman said. "With our expertise, if a parent comes in and says we need to develop this particular skill, we can guide them."

Judy's husband Jack came up with the idea for the store because he saw a need for a learning center. After brainstorming with Don and Linda Sass, the four decided to pursue the idea.

That was in January, 1976. Since then, the two couples who had no business experience, have spent every spare moment doing research, looking for a site, visiting similar stores as far away as New Jersey and taking adult education courses in business.

FORMER TEACHERS Judy Cerman and Don Sass have given up the classroom for the business world. They and their spouses have opened The Listening Post in Buffalo Grove.

THEY GOT counseling from the Small Business Administration and made good use of materials and services from the federal government. The government's guidelines for picking a site were particularly helpful, Sass said.

"The main thing was parking. Plaza Verde is expanding to a lot of 1,000 cars. We considered it a high-class center. The stores there are all doing well and some are expanding. The location has a lot of traffic," he said.

Although they have spent a large amount of business-oriented time, they also have been concentrating on creative learning.

While the store will handle children's books, arts and crafts and manufacturers' learning aids, the partners are also dreaming up and producing their own learning aids. One of their products is a clear glass root viewer that allows children (and adults) to watch the germination of seeds. Others work on reading and counting skills.

MOST OF THE store's materials, however, were selected from 50 manufacturers by the owners, who kept motivation of the child in mind.

"It's the Sesame Street syndrome," Sass said. "Kids want something that will not only teach them but entertain them." Many of the aids feature illustrations of sports figures or monsters, contain word riddles that are spelled out in secret codes — anything to get the child to want to use the material.

But few of the products are designed to be used alone. The store's philosophy is that children need adult contact for effective learning.

"The whole idea is to sell something that will help the child grow educationally, but not by himself," Sass said. "He needs someone there to have some contact. So we won't just sell a product, but we'll sell a whole idea."

A prime example is the store's children's books. Not only do the owners want parents to buy a book and read to their children, they want the reading aloud to be a successful experience. So one line of books will be by an author who is an expert "on making children's literature come alive," Sass said.

THE AUTHOR IS Bill Halloran, who travels throughout the country "talking to anyone who books him," and who will be working with the Learning Post, Sass said.

Halloran specializes in teaching adults how to make children want to learn to read by reading to them. Mrs. Cerman is working on some of these techniques so she can help parents and teachers who come to the store.

Along the same line, the partners hope to be available to put on workshops for groups like PTAs to show parents and teachers different ways to help their children learn. A new important area for workshops may be metrics, Sass said.

The former teachers' constant message is that children can be motivated to learn. Adults can help children understand that learning can be fun, not drudgery.

After a combined 25 years of experience in the teaching field and countless hours of research in setting up the store, the four partners are determined that their venture will be a success.

As a result, they're keeping a detailed diary. True to their original profession, if they make it big in business, they want to teach others how to follow in their footsteps.

Stock market just goes nowhere in busy week

by FRANK W. SLUSSER
UPI BUSINESS WRITER

NEW York (UPI) — Confronted with fears the economy would slow down, New York's 1977 blackout and some solid earnings reports, the stock market went nowhere this week. Trading was active.

The Dow Jones Industrial Average, again out of step with the rest of the market, slipped 2.04 points to 905.95 despite a 2.96-point gain Friday and a rally Wednesday from the brink of the 900 level.

The New York Stock Exchange common stock index rose 0.18 to 54.81 and Standard & Poor's 500-stock index, containing some over-the-counter issues, rose 0.39 to 100.18.

THE AMERICAN Stock Exchange and over-the-counter indices reached new highs, indicating the small investor and speculators have been active.

Advances edged declines, 923 to 861, among the 2,080 issues crossing the composite tape.

Although the market had an unscheduled holiday Thursday because of the blackout, big board volume totaled 94,543,120 shares for the unscheduled four-day week, compared with 83,652,070 last week and 115,994,860 during the same week a year ago. Friday's turnover of 29.1 million shares was the heaviest in three weeks.

Composite volume of NYSE issues listed on all U.S. exchanges and over the counter totaled 112,550,150 shares, compared with 97,737,910 last week.

ANALYSTS SAID the reason the Dow average is out of step is that institutions have been selling basic-industry stocks represented by the average because they believe the economy will slow down later this year from a strong first half.

A number of observers said the second-quarter figures may have represented a peak. But most do not anticipate a drastic decline. President Carter told newsmen he was optimistic about the long-term outlook.

Government reports showed industrial production, which increased 0.7 per cent in June, rose at a 12.5 per cent annual rate in the second quarter. That was the strongest three months since it climbed 23.9 per cent in 1975's third quarter, which marked the nation's emergence from the recession.

Dow up 2.96 in heavy stock trade

NEW YORK (UPI) — The stock market scored a broad gain Friday in the heaviest trading in more than three weeks following Thursday's unscheduled holiday for most of the industry that was caused by New York City's massive power blackout.

The market drew strength from some sharply higher earnings reports of such giants as IBM. The reports indicated the economy was stronger than observers had anticipated.

Investors were encouraged by a 1.1 per cent rise in retail sales last week. Traders were a bit concerned by a 1.1 per cent rise in May business inventories and a 0.2 per cent decline in sales. The news indicated the economy might be slowing down slightly.

Investors had anticipated the $3.2 billion surge in the nation's basic money supply the Federal Reserve Board reported late Thursday. Much of that gain was caused by increased Social Security payments. Normally, a sharp money-supply rise leads to fears of higher interet rates.

Against that background, the Dow Jones Industrial average gained 2.96 to 905.95. For the week, however, the closely watched average lost 2.04 points. It slipped 0.42 point Wednesday.

The New York Stock Exchange common stock index climbed 0.29 to 54.99 and the average price of a share increased by 17 cents.

Advances topped declines, 854 to 591, among the 1,910 issues crossing the composite tape.

The Big Board volume of 29,120,000 shares, up from the 23,160,000 traded Wednesday, was the heaviest since 29,738,330 changed hands June 21. Much of 9,220,000 shares traded in the first-hour volume represented orders that backed up Thursday and late Wednesday because of the blackout.

BROTHER JUNIPER

"I'm practicing on blueberries, coach . . . getting in shape for grapes."

KIDS' KORNER

by MARILYN HALLMAN

GIGGLE GAME

Each player starts this goofy game with a paper and pencil. At the top write a question beginning with "Why?" Fold it over so it can't be seen. Pass it to the next player.

Now each player writes an answer beginning with "because" on the bottom half of the paper. Open the papers and read the results. Example: "Why do elephants have trunks?" "Because it's so cold in January." The sillier the sentences, the better.

Vary the game by having players write a problem first ("What should I do if . . .?) Pass and write a solution. You may be surprised at some of the advice you get!

Ask Andy

Multipurpose cork comes from oak tree

Andy sends the Encyclopaedia Britannica's 1977 Yearbook of Science and the Future to Raymond Osborne, 13, of Niagara Falls, Ont., Canada, for his question:

WHAT IS CORK?

Cork is a wonderful product. It is used for insulation and the soles of some shoes. It can be used for floor and wall coverings and also for bulletin boards at home and at school. Where would some bottles be without cork stoppers? And did you know the product also is used as the center in some baseballs? It's also vital for fishing net floats and fishing pole handles.

Cork comes from a type of oak that is evergreen. It grows especially well in Spain and Portugal, and it is here that most of the world's cork is grown. The third best location for growing cork trees is Algeria, with California and some of the southeastern states also growing cork.

The outer layer of the cork oak tree is made up of dead cells. The walls become thickened and waxy and the cells are so compact that each may be touching 14 other cells. Cork trees live from 300 to 400 years and grow to heights of about 50 feet.

Cork is harvested just as many other crops are. A cork tree must reach the age of about 20 before it will have bark thick enough to be stripped. A first removal of cork from a tree is called the virgin bark. It is removed in June, July or August. After cork has been removed from the tree, it is necessary to wait another 10 years before the tree can be stripped again. The tree's best cork is produced after the second stripping.

Long-handled hatchets are used to cut long, oblong sections of bark from the top of the lowest branches to the bottom of the tree. Sections of cork bark then are pried off very carefully with the wedge-shaped handles of the hatchets.

The inner layer, called the periderm, produces more cork after each stripping. Cork will not grow on a spot where the inner layer of the bark has been cut by the stripper's hatchet, however.

Large slabs of cork are boiled, dissolving the tannic acid from the cork and softening it so it can be straightened out and packed in bundles. The rough, gritty outer layer also is scraped off. Before being packed for shipment, cork is sorted out according to thickness and quality.

The cork oak tree actually belongs to the beech family, Fagaceae. It is of the genus Quercus and the species suber.

Cork also is the name of the second largest city in the Republic of Ireland. The city was started by Viking settlers in 800 A.D., although Saint Finbar, an Irish bishop, founded a church there in about 600 A.D.

Andy sends a Denoyer-Geppert World Globe to Sherry Fitzgerald, 12, of Kingston, Ont., Canada, for her question:

HOW DOES A MOSQUITO BITE?

Only the female mosquito of a few species bites animals and man. They need blood for the development of eggs inside their bodies and obtain it from their victims.

Mosquitos don't really bite since they cannot open their jaws. They actually stab six needlelike parts called stylets through their victims' skin. The stylets are protected by a mosquito's lower lip, called the labium.

Most people are allergic to the saliva that flows from the mosquito during the stabbing. A welt, called a mosquito bite, forms. And it itches a lot.

After a mosquito has sipped enough blood, she pulls out the stylets and the labium slips into place over them. Then the insect flies away — unless you swat her first.

Do you have a question to Ask Andy? Send it on a post card with your name, age and complete address to Ask Andy in care of The Herald, P.O. Box 280, Arlington Heights, Ill., 60006. Entries are open to boys and girls 7 to 17.

DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE — Here's how to work it:

A X Y D L B A A X R is L O N G F E L L O W

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophes, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.

Win at bridge

Alert play bombs contract

Edgar Kaplan and Norman Kay have long been one of the best pairs. Their style is marked by good steady common sense tactics that frequently become really brilliant.

Edgar's queen of hearts opening was normal. South played low from dummy whereupon Norman overtook his partner's queen with the king in order to shift to the seven of clubs. He led his highest club so that Edgar would not play him for a club honor.

South rose with the ace, led his last heart to dummy's ace, ruffed a heart and led a diamond. Edgar was ready with the second key defensive play. He played his jack of diamonds. Dummy's king won the trick and Norman played his 10 spot to tell Edgar where the nine was.

Now declarer's goose was cooked. He tried his best by playing ace and another spade. But Edgar took his king, led a low diamond to Norman's nine and was sure to make his queen of clubs for the set.

Note that if Norman had not put his king of hearts on Edgar's queen or if Edgar had risen with the ace on the first diamond lead, Edgar would have been end-played and the hand would have been made.

Join the people in your community who serve in the Army Reserve.

A lot of people have discovered a good place to invest their extra time . . . The Army Reserve. Some came for the additional income and some because of opportunities for advancement. Some came to learn a new skill and to expand their interests in a career of their choice. Some came to gain experience and self-confidence.

And some came to do something positive for their Country. Which is a pretty good reason in itself.

'The Moon is Blue' fails as contemporary comedy

by LAURA SCHMALBACH

If the Country Club Comedy Theater's production of "The Moon is Blue" had lived up to its billing as "an innocent sex romp," it may have provided a few hours of pleasant, if innocuous, entertainment.

But, while F. Hugh Herbert's comedy certainly is innocuous, amateur performances and sluggish direction kept it from being anything but unpleasant and unrelaistic.

Consider the storyline: Brooklyn-born and bred Patty O'Neil (Joy Thorbjornsen) is a sweet 20-year-old virgin who doesn't smoke, doesn't drink, and plans a family with at least five kids. But, on her way down the primrose path, Patty encounters a suave young architect who picks her up on the observation deck of the Empire State Building.

ONE THING LEADS to another, and a few hours later Patty finds herself alone at his apartment. But before Don (R. Michael Slansky) can prove his intentions are honorable, their evening is interrupted by Don's former girlfriend's father (Tom Ventriss).

A divorced cynic who finds it difficult to offer his own daughter moral instruction, Slater quickly becomes enamored with the glib, naive Patty. The two men spend the rest of the evening vying for her affections, and Paity strings them along without letting down her "good girl" guard.

If this sounds like the 1950s, it is. Granted, the subject matter may have been risque when "The Moon is Blue" made its debut, but the exploits of a "professional virgin" hardly raise an eyebrow today.

THE PLAY COULD have been salvaged by taking a campy, "look how silly this is" approach, but director Theodore R. Horel plays it straight with a contemporary setting and references to President Carter and police brutality. As a result, many of the lines are more ludicrous than funny.

And the acting didn't help matters. Miss Thorbjornsen, a graduate of Buffalo Grove High School, wears the same pouty expression throughout the play. She delivers her lines mechanically, and her scenes with Slansky consist of little more than stilted dialogue on both sides.

Tom Ventriss as the debauched father is a welcome exception. His timing is perfect, and he plays his role as the broad caricature it should be. It's just too bad the rest of the cast didn't follow suit.

White Sox treat 41,597 fans to 9-7 win

HOLD IT, AL. Minnie Minoso has to restrain Sox baserunner Alan Bannister, who was picked off first base during game with Boston Friday night. Bannister wanted to tell the umpire what he thought of the call. Sox won, 9-6, over AL East leaders Boston.

Lamar Johnson's sizzling bat tames potent Red Sox

by BOB GALLAS

White Sox manager Bob Lemon paused in his post game dissertation as the fireworks going off on the field became loud enough to hear.

"Is that Boston taking batting practice?" the Sox skipper asked with a smile.

The Red Sox bats kept on coming Friday night but in the end the White Sox firepower reigned supreme as the White Sox knocked the Red Sox from first place in the American League West with a 9-7 win before the largest Comiskey Park crowd in three years, 41,597.

WILBUR WOOD'S dancing knuckleball stopped dancing in the sixth but the bat of Lamar Johnson and the arm of Lerrin LaGrow made the difference.

Johnson ripped a pinch-hit, bases-loaded triple in a six-run, fourth inning rally and LaGrow picked up his 16th save of the season by pitching the final three innings.

"The ball just stopped breaking. I don't know why," said Wood, who was nursing a two-hitter when the Red Sox led off the sixth with three straight hits and eventually scored two runs.

Wood gave way for LaGrow in the seventh when again the first three up got a hit as the Red Sox came up with two more runs to close in on the Sox lead, which had shrunk to 8-4.

THE SOX ADDED another run in the seventh off reliever Bill Lee, who was on in place of starter Bob Stanley, KO'd in the six-run fourth inning.

But the Red Sox closed the gap with two runs on a Carl Yastrzemski homer in the eighth off LaGrow, then one more in the ninth, which brought Lemon to the mound for a chat with LaGrow as the tying run, Jim Rice, waited to hit.

"I caught him (Lemon) before he could say anything and said I was OK," said LaGrow, who admitted he wanted to finish badly. Lemon agreed and the big righthander got Rice to look at strike three to end the game.

It was Johnson's pinch triple and four RBIs that made the difference for the Sox. Johnson had been the designated hitter against all comers earlier but a mild slump had caused Lemon to use lefthander Oscar Gamble in Friday's lineup. When Boston changed pitchers to the lefthanded

Lamar Johnson

Lee, Lamar got a chance to hit, ironically after Lee had intentionally walked Richie Zisk to fill the bases.

JOHNSON SMASHED that strategy by lining Lee's first pitch over centerfielder Fred Lynn's head and all the way to the wall.

"Once you hit a few homers you start thinking you can hit a few more," said Johnson, explaining his short slump. "The word gets around and pretty soon you see nothing but pitches outside. All you can do is go with them."

Manager Lemon was full of praise for the opposition Friday, as the Red Sox, down 7-0 in the fourth inning, kept pecking away until the very end.

"That bleeping club is awesome. I can see why they have seven players on the All-Star team," said Lemon. "I was so nervous I smoked two cigarettes in the ninth inning. I'd been getting by with one before."

"IT WILL BE nice to be on their side for a day," said Lemon, who will coach the American League star team Tuesday.

Lemon was in good humor after watching his club go 18 games over the .500 mark to maintain a hold on first in the A. L. West.

"I dunno what happened to Wilbur tonight. Maybe he didn't know how to hold the ball with a seven-run lead. He's been pitching all these years with no runs he may not know how to pitch with such a big lead.

"Rice would have been LaGrow's last man, no matter what. We would have brought fresh meat in for Yaz," said Lemon, referring to Carl Yastrzemski, who would have followed Rice to the plate.

Luzinski socks 2 homers

Nothin' doin' for Cubs in twin loss to Phils

PHILADELPHIA — The word "panic" is supposedly not in Herman Franks' vocabulary, but the Cub manager is perhaps just a day or two away from pushing down hard on the consternation button.

After his Cubs dropped a suddenly crucial twi-night doubleheader here by scores of 4-2 and 9-2 Friday night, Franks has to be wondering what ever happened to his first-place stranglehold.

The Cubs' National League East lead, once as high as 8½ games, has shrunk to a slim two-game margin after a hot second-place Philadelphia Phillies used superior pitching and timely, devastating hitting to roll past the North Siders twice.

THE PHILLIES, who have 13 of their last 14 home games, got strong pitching performances from Larry Christenson, now 8-5, and veteran Jim Lonborg, 3-3. They also got a pair of booming homers from former Cub fan Greg Luzinski, his 20th and 21st of the year.

The panic-bent Cubs, on the other hand, got a decent, but losing effort from Bill Bonham (9-9) and an altogether unacceptable effort from rookie Mike Krukow (7-7). And, once again, the team refused to hit when it counted — with men on bases — as their mark fell 5-12 since dropping a 5-0 decision in Montreal slightly more than two weeks ago.

The NL East leaders are looking at their smallest first-place edge since June 7 when Pittsburgh trailed them by 1½ games. Now it's the Phillies who are just two paces back.

THE CUBS' TRROBLES started, strangely enough, after they opened up a welcome 2-0 lead in the sixth inning of the lidlifter. Bonham, looking sharper than usual of late, was matching Christenson in a classic duel until a tripple by Ivan DeJesus, a walk, Bobby Murcer's sacrifice fly, and a double by Jerry Morales broke the deadlock.

In the bottom of the inning, though, Mike Schmidt and "Bull" Luzinski gave 61,177 hometown fans a thing or two to cheer about.

With two out, Schmidt hammered a triple off the fence in center, a ball that Morales seemed to lose in the lights. Then Luzinski, the forner Notre Dame prep who used to live in Prospect Heights while attending Cub games, put a Bonham fastball off the upper-deck facing for the game-tying blast.

It was the beginning of the end for the Cubs, who wasted a pair of golden opportunities to score in the opener, once when singles by Greg Gross and Bill Buckner gave them men at first and third with no out. Earlier, Murcer singled and stole second with no outs, but failed to get home.

THE PHILLIES PUT the game away with two runs in the seventh, keyed by an Astroturf single off the resilient bat of Garry Maddox, a balk by Bonham, and an infield hit by pinch-hitter Tommy Hutton.

The winning run was driven across by Ted Sizemore, who poked a liner to left for an RBI single. After Willie Hernandez relieved Bonham, Jerry Martin pinch-hit a crazily bouncing double past Gross in left field to produce the final run.

Christenson got as far as the eighth before he was replaced by Tug McGraw, who screwballed his way to an easy save.

The Cubs went hitless through the first four innings of the nightcap against Lonborg, but the Phillies jumped on Krukow for a run in the first on hits by Larry Bowa and Schmidt and a sacrifice fly by Luzinski.

WHEN THE CUBS tied the score at 1-1 in the fifth on a double by Morales and a single by Geroge Mitterwald, the Phils took the lead back again in the bottom of the inning. This time it was Bob Boone doing the honors with a home run off Krukow.

Luzinski hit another homer, this one off Paul Reuschel, in the three-run Phillie sixth and the hosts went on to pile up 17 hits off a total of four Cub hurders, including Donnie Moore and Steve Renko.

When Philadelphia had amassed a 6-1 lead in the seventh, Murcer slammed his 13th homer, but the Phils responded with a three-run eighth against Renko.

Rick Reuschel (12-3) will go against Randy Lerch (6-2) today in a game that has been switched from a night game for Game-of-the-Week purposes.

THE FIRST RUN of the night was carried home by the Cubs' Ivan DeJesus, sliding in ahead of the throw to Philadelphia catcher Barry Foote. DeJesus scored on Bobby Murcer's sacrifice fly in the sixth inning on Friday's opener. The Cubs lost, 4-2.

Schaumburg loses pair to Arlington

by DON FRISKE

The Arlington Heights American Legion baseball team ended its Ninth District action Friday night with a doubleheader sweep over Schaumburg.

Those victories of 2-0 and 6-2 gave Arlington a 7-3 mark in the league while Schaumburg finished at 8-6. Although it was not pleasing for Schaumburg followers, the double dip helped to clear the fog that was surrounding the playoff picture.

The Ninth District tournament will begin Monday. Arlington is not involved with any tourney play until the Cook County action, which begins Aug. 4.

ARLINGTON IS EXEMPT until that time because the Cook County affair will be played at Recreation Park, the home site of the 1976 national runnerups.

Logan Square, which would have had to play Schaumburg if Friday's doubleheader had turned out different, have a bye until July 27. At that time, the Lions, who finished at 8-4 in the league, will play the winner of the Ninth District preliminaries.

Among the contestants vying for a shot at Logan Square will be Schaumburg, Rolling Meadows, Tattler Post and Park Ridge. Elimination play will begin Monday between the No. 3 and No. 6 teams in the district and the No. 4 and No. 5 teams.

Places will not be determined until some time today.

THIS WAS ALL MADE possible when Arlington used strong pitching and timely hitting to handle Schaumburg Friday night.

Kevin McBride pitched a complete game to get the victory in the opening contest. He allowed only three hits and a walk in shutting out Schaumburg.

Arlington scored the only run needed in the first inning when Frank DeSimone walked, stole second and came home on Mike Jennings single.

An insurance run was added in the third on Jennings' single, a stolen base and a sacrifice. Kevin McKenna was the losing pitcher.

IN THE SECOND game, Arlington scored one run in the first with the help of two Schaumburg errors. Three more runs came in during the third when Dan Isola, Mike Mayerck and Jennings singled.

Doug Harth was breezing along as the Arlington starting pitcher when his team made the score 6-0 with two runs in the fifth. Isola walked, DeSimone doubled to center and both scored.

Schaumburg got its first hit off Harth in the sixth when Bob Urbain led off with a double. The shutout was broken when Bill Friskics' single scored Urbain. Bill Bilsley's sacrifice fly completed the scoring for the night.

Those two hits were the only ones recorded against Harth, who got relief help from Todd Walker in the seventh.

Vidovic reaches golf finals

MILWAUKEE — A pair of 20 year-olds — Jerry Vidovic of Blue Island, Ill., and Jeff Kern of Tucson, Ariz. — swept through two rounds of match play Friday to advance to the final of the 52nd U.S. Public Links tournament.

Vidovic beat Walter Brozik, Lancaster, N.Y., 5 and 4 and Spencer Sappington, Manchester, Mo., 4 and 3. Kern turned back Tony Figuerdo, Miami, 1-up over 19 holes and then beat Kim Hubbart, Spokane, Wash., 2 and 1 in the semifinals.

Vidovic, a business administration senior at Illinois State University and Kern, who works for his father's custom home building firm, will play a 36-hole match today for the title over the 6,608-yard Brown Deer Golf Course.

VIDOVIC, WHO had shared medalist honors with an even-par 142, had the easier of the afternoon rounds in beating Sappington, a 33-year-old veteran of many national tournaments. Vidovic was near perfect and put Sappington away by winning the 8th, 9th, 11th, 12th and 13th holes with pars.

Sappington had held a 1-up lead until Vidovic began his surge.

"Those were the best two match play rounds of my life," Vidovic said. "I put pressure on them (his opponents), and that did it."

Sappington took his early lead with a birdie on the par-5 fourth hole. But Vidovic evened it on No. 8 with a par that he salavaged with a chip out of the sand to within three feet of the pin.

HE TOOK THE lead with a 20-foot par putt on No. 9. Sappington then bogeyed 11, 12 and 13 and said fatigue was the reason his game fell apart.

"I was fighting a bad golf swing all week and getting tired didn't help," he said.

Kern, who won this year's Southwest Amateur title in El Paso, Tex., had a tough fight with Hubbart. They were even after 14 holes.

JORGE ORTA, White Sox second baseman, looks with respect at the sharp spikes of Carl Yastrzemski in this forceout at second during Sox' 9-6 victory Friday. Yastrzemski, Boston's All-Star outfielder was retired on Carlton Fisk's grounder.

Reds, Pirates win again

Royals are hot—4 in row

A torrid Frank White hit a three-run homer to ignite a five-run fifth inning Friday night in lifting the Kansas City Royals to their fourth straight victory, a 7-4 triumph over the New York Yankees.

Darrell Porter and Fred Patek led off the fifth against Ron Guidry, 6-5, with singles before White unloaded his third homer of the year deep into the left field seats. White, a .232 lifetime hitter, has now knocked in eight runs in his last three games and lifted his batting average 49 points in the month of July to .261.

GEORGE BRETT then reached base on an error by New York third baseman Graig Nettles and came all the way around to score the fourth run of the inning on a hit-and-run single by Amos Otis. Al Cowens then doubled to score Otis and enable Paul Splittorff to up his record to 7-5 with ninth inning relief help from Doug Bird and Steve Mingori.

Cowens and Porter poked RBI doubles to score the other Kansas City runs while Thurman Munson stroked a two-run single to highlight a three-run fifth inning by New York. The Yankees added a run in the ninth on Cliff Johnson's RBI single.

Juan Beniquez doubled in two first-inning runs and right-hander Bert Blyleven whipped Cleveland for the third time this season as the Texas Rangers beat the Indians 8-3, in the first game of a doubleheader.

With two out in the first Dave May doubled and scored on Willie Horton's single. After Toby Harrah walked, Beniquez looped a double down the right field line.

Singles by Bill Fahey, Claudell Washington and Dave May, plus Jim Mason's sacrifice, accounted for two more Texas runs in the fifth. In the sixth pinch-hitter Jim Sundberg singled in two runs after a single by Horton and walks to Harrah and Bump Wills.

BLYLEVEN, 8-9, allowed six hits, including a two-run homer by Jim Norris in the seventh, while the Rangers manhandled former teammate Jim Bibby, 8-7.

Mike Flanagan pitched his fifth straight complete-game victory and Baltimore won its 13th game in the last 15 when the Orioles beat the Milwaukee Brewers 4-2.

Flanagan was tagged for 11 hits but yielded only single runs in the first and sixth innings to boost his record to 7-3.

In the NL, George Foster hit his 29th homer of the season and fourth in the last two games to spark the Cincinnati Reds to an 8-3 victory over the Houston Astros and provide rookie right-hander Paul Moskau with his first major league victory.

FOSTER'S HOMER, which matched his total output for the 1976 season, was one of nine hits the Reds collected against Houston starter and loser Gene Pentz, 1-2.

A double by Champ Summers and single by Pete Rose gave the Reds a 1-0 lead in the third. Johnny Bench doubled home a second run in the fourth. Foster's homer followed Dan Driessen's single in the sixth.

The Reds capitalized on four walks issued by Joe Niekro and a passed ball to score their final four runs in the seventh. Two came on Mike Lum's bases-loaded single.

Moskau held the Astros to one run and two hits through the first six innings. He received relief help from Dale Murray and Pedro Borbon.

Jim Rooker tossed a three-hitter and Dave Parker collected two hits to increase his league-leading batting average to .336 and lead the Pittsburgh Pirates to a 7-1 victory over the New York Mets in the first game of a twinight doubleheader.

ROOKER, 7-5, walked five and struck out four in besting Pat Zachry, 4-10. It was the left-hander's fourth complete game in 16 starts and gave the Pirates their eighth victory in the last nine games.

Parker doubled and scored in the fourth inning, singled to lead off a three-run rally in the eighth and drove in the Pirates' final run with a sacrifice fly in the ninth.

It was the third sac fly in the game for Pittsburgh. Frank Taveras produced one in the third and Al Oliver drove in another run in the fourth inning.

Reserve outfielder Brian Asselstine hit a home run and robbed Terry Whitfield of a bases-loaded extra base hit with a sliding catch to pace the Atlanta Braves to a 3-2 victory over the San Francisco Giants.

Asselstine, filling in for Garry Matthews, hit his second homer this season with two out in the fourth inning to open the scoring. The Braves scored twice more that inning when Darrell Chaney singled, Rod Gilbreath doubled and centerfielder Whitfield threw the ball away. Gilbreath scored on a single by winning pitcher Eddie Solomon, 1-1.

SOLOMON PITCHED six innings of scoreless ball before being lifted in the bottom of the sixth, when Matthews pinch-hit for him and doubled.

The Giants scored twice in the seventh when Marc Hill doubled, Rob Andrews singled and pinch-hitter Derrel Thomas stroked a two-run single.

Two Russian tennis greats at Northwestern University

The Russians are coming . . . to Northwestern University, Wednesday night, July 27 at 8 p.m. as World Team Tennis presents the Soviets vs. the Indiana Loves in McGaw Hall, Evanston.

No. 1 Soviet player, Olga Morozova, and eight-time Soviet champion, Alex Metreveli, anchor the Russian squad.

Sue Barker and Vitas Gerulaitis headline the Indiana Loves. Wimbledon star Gerulaitis lost in the semifinals to winner Bjorn Borg. No. 6 ranked Barker holds the French and German Open champion titles.

Currently holding the No. 8 slot, Morozova has played for 18 years. She became the first Soviet player to reach Wimbledon and is a many-time Soviet and European amateur champion.

Olga, 28, reached the quarterfinals at Wimbledon and the U.S. Open finals this year.

Recognized as the best Russian player in history, Metreveli, 32, became the first representative to join the WCT in 1972.

Metreveli is noted for his strong performance in many European tournaments. A former runner-up at Wimbledon (1973), Alex has played in the British Classic for eight years.

One of tennis' most flamboyant players, Gerulaitis, 22, is one of our country's top players. Unusual quickness, a great repetoire of shots and a booming serve are Gerulaitis' strengths. He ranks No. 4 in the world.

Voted MVP in 11975 for World Team Tennis playoffs, Vitas won Wimbledon the same year.

At the top of the Loves' roster is Sue Barker. A strong forehand and consistent backhand are the 21-year-old English, blonde's trademarks.

Tickets are on sale at Dyche Stadium, 1501 Central, St., Evanston. For information call 492-7070.

'Cats end with win

Wheeling's summer league baseball team wrapped up its regular season with a 5-3 victory over Buffalo Grove Friday. The win was the Wildcats' 10th in 12 games. They had already clinched the North Division title.

The summer league tournament begins Monday.

Horwitch in St. Louis net finals

ST. LOUIS — Top-seeded Matt Horwitch of Highland Park, Ill., Friday moved into the finals of the St. Louis Junior Invitational tennis tournament.

Horwitch, using a strong serve and a consistent baseline game, defeated ninth-seeded John Stauffer of Des Moines, 7-5, 6-3.

Horwitch's opponent in the final today will be fifth-seeded Arjun Fernando of Belleville, Ill. Fernando overcame the smashing serve of third-seeded Blaine Willenborg of Miami Shores, Fla., to win 6-4, 3-6, 6-2.

THE FINALISTS in the girls 18 division are the two tops seeds, Kelly Kruk of Charleston, W.Va., who beat third-seeded Lori Oberheide of St. Louis, 6-2, 6-4, in the semifinals, and Maria Rothschild of St. Louis, who eliminated Gail Garcia of East Northport, N.Y., 6-1, 6-4.

In the boys 16 semifinals, fourth-seeded Talbot Davis of Dallas beat John McCurdy of St. Louis, 6-2, 6-4, and Ramesh Krishnan of Mylapore, Nadras, India, upset second-seeded Mike Einsidler, Great Neck, N.Y., 6-3, 6-1.

Second-seeded Julia Leighton, Radando Beach, Calif., won the girls 16 championship by defeating third-seeded Cindy Brightfield of St. Louis, 6-4, 6-3.

Victor Cassone of Stamford, Conn., won the boys 14 title by beating Migual Nido of Puerto Rico, 6-0, 6-1, and top-seeded Susan Connelly of Littleton, Colo., won the girls 14 division with a victory over Fatima Ravot of Mississauga, Ont., 6-2, 6-2.

DOUGLAS PIELET of Aurora, Ill., won the boys 12 division over Daniel Leal of North Aurora, Ill., 6-1, and Kathy Foxworth of St. Louis won the girls 12 title by defeating Beverly Bones of Deerfield, Ill., 2-6, 7-5, 6-1.

CHICAGO MAYOR Michael Bilandic (left) turns fisherman while helping stock 100,000 rainbow trout into Lake Michigan. Sponsored by Salmon Unlimited, the release in Belmont Harbor insures a healthy fishery in the big pond for years to come.

Offshore stocking of lake trout successful

Offshore experimental stocking of lake trout yearlings in Lake Michigan near Wilmette by the Illinois Department of Conservation (IDC) and the Coastal Zone Management Program may prove the key to spurring natural reproduction of the lakers.

Some 85,000 of the lake trout were recently taken by barge from Waukegan Harbor to an area four miles east of Tower Rd., Wilmette, known as the Glencoe Reef.

This stocking and one last week of a deeper water reef off the coast of Waukegan came about after a workshop in May involving experts from the IDC, the Coastal Zone Management Program of the Illinois Division of Water Resources, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and the University of Wisconsin.

"RESTOCKING'S our best shot, we think," said IDC fishery biologist Harry Wight, of the general consensus reached at the May workshop.

Nearly all the lake trout taken out of Lake Michigan in recent years have been hatchery fish. The lake's natural population of the fish was decimated in the 1950's by what is believed to be a combination of overfishing by commercial fishermen and predation by sea lampreys.

Previous plantings of lake trout as early as 1967 were unsuccessful in reproducing themselves because they were stocked in harbors. Unbeknownst to the biologists at that time was the tendency of the fish to return to their place of entry to the lake to spawn. And harbors with their shallow dirty water would not support young lake trout fry.

Because the lake trout do not reproduce until they become about five-years-old, the success of today's planting will not be known until 1981.

ABOUT 66,000 lake trout of the Green Lake strain were planted in a similar offshore stocking a year ago. The Green Lake strain are deep water spawning lake trout native to the southern portion of Lake Michigan.

The trout planted in Glencoe Reef are from Lake Superior and are believed to spawn in shallower water than the Green Lake strain.

The Glencoe Reef is an outcropping of rock about 1,000 feet in diameter. It comes within 22 feet of the surface, and its surrounding waters are 60 feet deep, Wight said.

The reef was only partly known to a few fishermen until a recent study of the lake bottom by the Illinois State Geological Survey.

THE FISH ARE being supplied by the Jordan River National Fish Hatchery in Elmira, Mich. They are being ferried across Lake Michigan from Ludington, Michigan to Milwaukee, Wis., inside a tanker truck, which will then be driven to the Waukegan Harbor.

The offshore stocking is only the first step in trying to rehabilitate the lake trout population. Coastal Zone Management is also paying $32,000 for development of a strategy for reviving the fish by Dr. Ross Horall of the University of Wisconsin. That study, which will begin this fall, will examine the effects of pesticides upon the fish and further examine data obtained by the Illinois Geological Survey.

RACINE, Wis. — The Prowess had barely slowed to trolling speed when its two captains began setting out fishing lines, three deep for the tackle-busting chinook and five shallow for the fish that keeps them in business — the coho.

Salmon fishing is serious business for Don Anderson and Marv Wiesneth, whose 27-foot charter boat carries an expensive Vexilar Video-Sonar to detect fish in Lake Michigan.

"It won't tell you how to catch them," Wiesneth said, "but it allows you to pinpoint them."

WITH THE RODS set, it was only a matter of deciding which of us — M. H. Smith and Bob Taylor of Racine, or me — would take the first fish.

"You two flip for the first turn," I said. "The big fish is coming third."

Taylor, who won the toss, began surveying the rods for a strike, telling us, "We ought to liven this up with a little side bet." Smith and I quickly tossed our money into the hat.

"This is what we call the Racine Reef," Wiesneth said, pointing out the landmarks that could guide a fisherman to the area. "Regardless of the time of the year, it generally holds fish, at least that's what I'm betting on."

"THE FISHING has been poor lately," said Ken Killberg, who was along to monitor fishing conditions. Killberg is this year's chairman of the Salmon-A-Rama III contest, scheduled for today through July 24.

At least 3,000 anglers are expected to participate in the contest for more than $18,500 in cash and prizes. But Killberg said two other contests — the American Salmon Derby and a professional fishing tournament — run concurrently with a combined purse of more than $60,000. He said an angler can register the same fish in both the Salmon-A-Rama and the derby by nolding tickets for both events.

Nancy Livermore of Addison, Ill., held two tickets last year when she took first place among 2,000 anglers in the 1976 Salmon-A-Rama and also won the American Salmon Derby with a 34.7 pound chinook, taking home a new car and $10,000 savings bond.

"Fishing was slow last year just before the contest," Killberg said, "but the fish really turned on during the event."

Killberg said she will return this year to defend her title.

"FISH ON!" Wiesneth shouted. Taylor jumped for the rod to battle a four-pound coho to the boat.

Wiesneth barely had time to set the lure back in the water when another rod popped. Smith, chomping down hard on his cigar, landed the next coho, slightly larger.

Both fish were caught on a green and silver Little Hooker, a bead fly developed and marketed by Anderson.

"It's ugly but it sure is our bread and butter lure aboard this boat," Anderson said.

ALL HITS THAT day came on variations of the same fly.

"Two fish in only 30 minutes isn't exactly poor fishing," Killberg said, correcting his earlier comments.

For me, it was one of those days. I latched on to a coho that appeared big enough to take the money pot, but lost it half way to the boat. That jinx was passed to Taylor, who barely had the rod in his hand when he lost his second fish.

But Smith was a different story. The only thing he lost that day was his cigar, dropping the stogie while battling a six-pounder to the boat.

Now he can afford to buy a few more boxes.

Deer hunters given second chance to apply for permits

Prospective deer hunters, including those who were unsuccessful in the May 18 drawing for deer hunting permits, may apply beginning August 15 for one of 13,809 permits still available in the 63 counties whose quotas were not filled in the permit allocation lottery.

Applications for the remaining permits will be accepted on a first come, first served basis until all have been allocated. Applications received at the deer permit office prior to Aug. 15 will be returned.

Prospective deer hunters who did not receive permits during the lottery phase of the deer program are being notified now. During the drawing 49,691 deer permits were issued, filling the quotas for 36 counties and the special hunts at Crab Orchard and Long Island refuge areas.

APPLICANTS MUST use official deer permit application forms, and no more than six applications may be sent in one envelope. Prospective hunters are required to give their name, address, date of birth, height, weight, hair and eye color, county of residence, and their first choice of the county they wish to hunt. Applicants also may list a second choice of county in the event their first choice is closed when their application is processed.

The number from a 1976 or 1977 hunting license and from the Firearm Owners Identification (FOID) card are required on the application unless the applicant is exempt from having them. Exempt persons should list the reason for the exemption in the place designated for the FOID or license numbers.

Applications must be signed and accompanied by a $5 check or money order. Incomplete or incorrect applications will be returned to the sender.

"An estimated 18,000 applications were rejected during the lottery phase of the deer program," said Dr. David Kenney, director of the Department of Conservation. "A big percentage were rejected because the counties they requested were already filled. However, many other applications had to be returned because applicants failed to complete their applications or completed them incorrectly."

THE DEPARTMENT recommends that individual checks or money orders accompany each application when prospective hunters apply as a group. If two applications are accompanied by a $10 check and one of the applications is incomplete or incorrect, both applications will be rejected. However, if the applications are accompanied by individual $5 checks, only the incomplete or incorrect application will be rejected.

Additional information required for the first time on this sear's application was suggested by the Citizen's Deer Task Force. The task force was organized to look into the deer program and make suggestions which would improve the deer hunting program in Illinois.

Persons submitting more than one application for a shotgun permit, or providing false or deceptive information on the permit application, risk rejection of the application, revocation of the permit, and forfeiture of the fees.

CHARGING BEAR. Jack Nicklaus sights his ball on the last hole of the second round of the $250,000 Pleasant Valley Golf Classic, shooting a 67 to share the lead.

Bernard King back in police custody

KNOXVILLE, Tenn.—Bernard King, former Tennessee basketball star, was charged by Knoxville police Friday with prowling, resisting arrest and possession of marijuana, his second arrest in five days. King was arrested shortly after midnight at a West Knoxville apartment complex when a resident reported a "prowler." King was treated at University Hospital for a slight scalp injury received in a scuffle with the arresting officer.

The 6-7 basketball All-American faces a hearing Tuesday on charges of attempting to steal a television set from UT's Stokeley Athletic Center where he starred for three seasons. He was the first-round pick of the New York Nets last month, after deciding to end his college career and enter the National Basketball Association draft on hardship status.

Nicklaus charges to share of lead

Jack Nicklaus, gaining enthusiasm with every birdie putt, fired a 4-under-par 67 Friday to tie powerful Rod Curl and Ray Floyd for the second-round lead in the $250,000 Pleasant Valley Classic. First-round leader Fred Marti, who set a course record with a 64 Thursday, skidded to 80 and fell nine strokes behind the leaders.

Nicklaus, who admitted he had a lackadaisical attitude coming into the event, added the 67 to his first-round 68 for a 7-under-par 135. Also at 7-under was Curl, who shot a 66, and Floyd, who had a 68.

JoAnne Carner, with a putter as hot as the 91-degree temperatures, meanwhile, fired a six-under par 66 Friday to take a one-stroke lead in the first round of the $80,000 Borden-LPGA Classic. Carner's consistent 33-33 round over the 6,333-yard, par 72 Riviera Country Club course was one shot better than the 67 turned in by Amy Alcott and two less than a pair of 68s shot by Dot Germain and Betty Burfeindt.

Vilas advances to tennis semifinals

KITZBUHEL, Austria—Top seeded Guillermo Vilas of Argentina, using powerful overhead smashes, Friday defeated sixth seeded Buster Mottram of Britian 6-4, 6-1, to move into the semifinals of the $75,000 Austrian Grand Prix tennis tournament. Mottram, who upset Vilas six weeks ago during the West German championships, unsuccessfully tried to outlob the Argentine ace in a match with many baseline-to-baseline rallies.

"It's a tricky job to play on red clay only hours after heavy rains," said Vilas afterward. He will meet Yugoslavia's Zeljko Franulovic in the semis, who eliminated Bob Lutz of the United States Thursday. "It's going to be a touch match," said Vilas. "Franulovic has beaten me once this year."

CBS admits promotions inaccurate

WASHINGTON—The CBS television network has admitted that some of its promotional and on-air statements concerning a series of tennis "challenge matches" involving Jimmy Connors were inaccurate and misleading. Three of the four matches involving Connors were billed at one time or another as "winner-take-all" events when in fact none were, according to a 61-page report to the Federal Communications Commission made available Friday.

The report was prepared by two attorneys — Arthur S. Lane of Princeton, N.J., and Timothy N. Black of Washington — hired by CBS to conduct an independent investigation. It was requested by the FCC on May 23.

"None of the four matches was actually "winner-take-all" in the sense that the loser received nothing for playing," the report said. "To this extent, use of the phrase 'winner-take-all' in pre-match publicity for or over-the-air descriptions of some of the matches was inaccurate."

America Cup trial matches slated

NEWPORT, R.I. — The America's Cup pressure cooker heats up again Saturday with the start of the second set of trial races to choose a U.S. 12-meter yacht to defend the cup.

It was decided at a skippers' meeting Friday night aboard the New York Yacht Club Committee boat Bobbara that Courageous and Enterprise will sail Saturday. Courageous and Independence will race Sunday and Independence and Enterprise will race Monday.

The observation series, which will last 12 days, gives the NYYC America's Cup Committee a chance to observe and evaluate the performance of the 12-meters Independence, Courageous and Enterprise.

Woodfield wins title

Woodfield's Babe Ruth League team won the district title Friday night with a 12-2 victory over Schaumburg as Tim Bukar went the distance on the hill, allowing just three hits and fanning 12.

The Woodfield champs now head for the regional tourney in Freeport where they will play the host team in a best-of-three series starting with a doubleheader Sunday at 4 p.m. If a third game is needed, it will be played Tuesday, also in Freeport.

Editor's note . . .

It's not exactly cowboys and Indians but the trail rides near Galena, Ill., are about the next best thing to riding the range in the Old West if you let your fantasies take the reins. Chief editorial writer Wandalyn Rice, an avid horseback rider, writes about her overnight trail ride in the Galena Territory. A companion piece tells Leisure readers about other horseback riding centers a little closer to home. Page 3.

Lots of people collect and restore antiques, but collecting and restoring antique aircraft is a hobby that one could safely say is a bit extraordinary. Metropolitan staff writer Dave Ibata talked with several aircraft collectors about their hobby and his report on these "daring young men in their flying machines" appears on page 4.

ON THE COVER — Herald staff photographer Craig Camp took to the air in the nose compartment of a restored B-17 bomber to snap the photo that appears on this week's cover. The aircraft pictured is a B-25 Mitchell being piloted by Dr. Allan Crosby of Milwaukee over southwest Cook County.

You can live out your cowboy fantasies — sleeping under the stars, campfires, riding the trail — at the Galena Territory

by Wandalyn Rice

The sun is setting over the hills. You and your faithful steed are jogging along slowly, savoring the evening breezes, watching the first few flickers of fireflies and looking for a place to camp.

Later, with the stars and moon glistening through the trees and the soft sound of your horse's grazing nearby, you settle down to a flickering campfire and a hearty dinner.

The scene is a fantasy that afflicts anyone who has ever fallen under the spell of a western movie. Whether your childhood hero was Roy Rogers, the Lone Ranger or Shane, there is a mystique about horseback riding guaranteed to resurrect those fantasies.

It is precisely for people who want to live out their cowboy-sleeping-under-the-stars fantasy that the Shenandoah Riding Center in the Galena Territory offers on overnight trail rides.

The rides, put together for groups of six or more, wind through the one-mile-square Galena Territory, a development near Galena in far Northwestern Illinois.

Granted, the rides are not a total step into yesteryear. Don Tussing, a Savanna, Ill. music teacher who is spending the summer running trail rides at Shenandoah, leads the horsemen over the hills to the prearranged campsite where they are met by a truck with such necessities as food and personal belongings. And, in addition to such natural wonders as woods and bluffs overlooking the area, horsemen can admire some of the handsome summer homes built by those who have purchased land in the Galena Territory.

However, there are authentic touches. If it rains, the campers move into a deserted one-room schoolhouse which still contains old desks and a blackboard and sometimes shelters wildlife. "We usually have to check it out for rattlesnakes," Tussing says with a grin.

Rattlesnakes don't generally disrupt the campers, however. But other forms of wildlife have been known to show up. "It's fun when a raccoon comes along at night," Tussing says.

Morning — and by that Tussing means about 5 a.m. — brings a campfire breakfast and a leisurely ride back to the riding center, part of it over an old stagecoach road. In addition, the route of the ride includes blackberry vines, apple and cherry trees, all of which can provide possible stops for Tussing and his riders, either in the morning or evening.

The riding center itself offers other attractions for persons who are interested in horses, whether they want to ride as part of a vacation or want to seriously work on the sport. Hour-long trail rides run each day, beginning about 9 or 10 a.m. Riding lessons for both English and Western riders are available. And, for those who are more than casual weekend riders, there are breeding and training programs.

For property owners in the Galena Territory, the riding center will board horses trailered up for short periods. Groups of horsemen can make arrangements to ride the area with enough advance notice, but must have a guide along if they aren't property owners, according to Terry Harlan.

The riding center is owned by the Branigar Corp., the developer of the Galena Territory, and is promoted by the company as one of the advantages of owning property there. Nevertheless, the staff of the riding center, professional horsemen who have worked and taught in other areas, seem ill-disposed to try any land-sell pitches on casual riders.

Tussing, in fact, finds the promotional

Meet the minds behind those grand, old flying machines

by Dave Ibata

In the beginning was the wing.

The wing is a simple device, a curved shape modeled after the wings of birds. It generates lift as it moves through the air.

Two brothers from Dayton, Ohio, named Orville and Wilbur Wright, strapped an engine to a pair of wings, added a rudder, an elevator and "wing-warping," or primitive ailerons, to control their machine in flight, and produced the first airplane.

Within 50 years of the Wrights' first powered flight in 1903, the wing had become as commonplace in modern life as the wheel. And because it became so common, people took it for granted, much as they took for granted every other modern convenience, however revolutionary its effect on history.

But a handful of pilots in the 1950s remembered how pioneer flying machines reshaped the world. They wanted to share this appreciation with others. They began buying what few examples remained of early flying machines, and restored them to their original, pristine flying condition.

These men and women started a movement, one that in the past decade sent prices of antique aircraft soaring, and today enlists the support and effort of thousands of aviation buffs intent on preserving and flying the old wings.

Col. Van Skiles, of the Confederate Air Force, an organization dedicated to restoring combat aircraft of World War II, explained why so many spend so much time, effort and money on so unorothodox a hobby: nursing antique aircraft back to health.

Skiles said, "We want to preserve and fly these airplanes, so people can still see, hear and smell them. They're beautiful sitting in a museum, but they're a lot prettier in the air."

Dr. Bern Yocke, of Aurora, owns and flies a 35-year-old Beech D-17S "Staggerwing," a classic cabin biplane. Asked why he goes to the trouble of maintaining an airplane for which spare parts are almost nonexistent, he says simply, "Nostalgia."

The word, "antique," takes in airplanes that flew before 1950. Airplane restorers find themselves a niche in aviation history in which they fit comfortably, and immerse themselves in their specialty, be it Piper Cubs or P-38 "Lightnings."

Not until the 1950s did antique aircraft restoration start attracting interest.

Skyrocketing prices for old airplanes illustrate increasing popularity. For example, the military in the late 1940s unloaded surplus World War II planes at incredibly low prices. In 1947, a surplus Mustang single-engine fighter could be purchased for $2,400. The same Mustang sold for $10,000 in 1960. Today, its going price ranges between $75,000 and $125,000, depending on its condition.

Among the 800,000 pilots now flying is a significant number of men and women interested in the airplanes of a bygone era. The 50,000-member Experimental Aircraft Assn., based near Milwaukee, Wis., reports 2,100 persons in its antique classic aircraft division and 700 persons in its warbirds division.

The EAA, the CAF and the Antique Airplane Assn. of the Greater Chicago Area are the three most active civilian organizations in Chicagoland.

The EAA subdivides restorations into three categories:

• Antique Airplanes. Any Aircraft more than 30 years old qualifies.

• Classic Airplanes. Within this group are contained airplanes that made historic contributions to aviation. Such a designation is not limited to old craft. For example, airplanes that would qualify include the Staggerwing, the Piper Cub, the Douglas DC-3, the Beech Bonanza and the Lear jet.

• Warbirds. Here are found military aircraft flown during World War I and World War II.

Few World War I airplanes are in the Midwest. Most of these fragile, fabric-covered planes reside in more hospitable environments of the South, Southwest and West Coast. However, enough World War II planes fly in the Midwest to assemble for periodic, spectacular airshows.

So how does one enter the field of aircraft restoration?

Garner Williams, of Naperville, is a typical enthusiast. A data processor with United Air Lines in Elk Grove Township, Williams started restoring airplanes 22 years ago, using rudimentary skills he picked up as a youth by hanging around airports.

"First you've got to be awful careful," Williams said. "Anybody that's mechanically inclined and halfway careful can get an airplane rebuilt."

Knowledge of carpentry, welding, sheet metal work, upholstering, airplane fabric recovering, tool and die work and engine mechanics helps, Williams added.

The basic airplane, surprisingly, has changed little since World War I. An engine turns a propeller in front; the passenger compartment and wings are placed in the middle; and a tail, with vertical and horizontal control surfaces, sticks out the rear. Controls basically remain the same as when the Wright Brothers invented them.

A flying machine is divided into two major components: an airframe and a powerplant.

The airframe includes the skeletal structure, be it of wood or metal; the fuselage, wing and tail; surface coverings, usually of fabric or metal; the passenger compartment/cockpit; the fuel system; the rudder, elevator and ailerons; control linkages; and the landing gear. The engine includes the motor, propeller, controls and accessories.

The restorer often must tear down the entire airplane to its skeleton, a run-out engine to its individual parts. All must be inspected, repaired and replaced when necessary, and reassembled to meet strict safety regulations of the FAA.

As for costs, Williams said, "I don't think there is any minimum income. It's just a matter of how much you want to do without. And after you rebuild an airplane, doing all the work yourself, you have an investment."

"I started doing this with old planes because they were the only ones I could afford," Williams said. "It got to the point I realized old airplanes flew better than new airplanes, so I stayed with it." Since 1955, Williams said, he has owned and flown five Luscombes, three Cubs, four Cessnas, one Piper, one Meyers, one Taylorcraft, one Mooney and one homebuilt, plus eight other planes he has had in various stages of reconstruction.

Williams currently spends his weekends working on his 1928 Cessna AW, a high-wing, single-engine cabin monoplane. So far, he has completed the wings. These took him more than a year's work. Next, he must reconstruct the fuselage, passenger compartment, controls and engine. Then he must assemble them and test fly the plane for an FAA inspector.

Williams draws parts from two of the eight known Cessna AWs in existence. He works weekends in his hangar, which he also built. It sits behind his house at Naper Aero Estates, a fly-in community with a 2,100-foot asphalt runway, so he has understanding company for neighbors.

While Williams does nearly all of the work himself, he occasionally calls for outside assistance. On the AW he contacted Eldon Cessna, son of Clyde Cessna, who helped design and build the AW.

"He (Eldon Cessna) flew in from California, and he was almost in tears when he saw the AW," Williams said. Eldon Cessna then gave Williams photographs and design drawings for the AW, plus a few hand-drawn schematics sketched from memory. Using these as a guideline, Williams hopes to have his AW in the air by next spring.

"All the pieces were built by hand, so it's easy to rebuild," Williams said. "It's not like a car, with a lot of forgings and stampings. There's nothing in an old airplane I can't fabricate myself."

Williams has received first-place awards for his Cessna Airmaster, on which he spent 14 months rebuilding. He regularly flies the Airmaster, a high-wing cabin monoplane built in the late 1930s. Under Williams' skilled hands, it still performs up to specifications: 160 mph on a 7-cylinder, 165-horsepower radial engine.

"I'm known nationwide for the work I do," Williams said matter-of-factly. "I make them just like they were when they left the factory. My interest is making them original — that's what the (contest) judges like."

Unlike Williams, who finds airplanes in the worst possible condition and then restores them to flying order, Yocke bought his Staggerwing already restored. While mum about how much he paid, he said a Staggerwing, which sold for $17,000 new in the 1930s, today can fetch $70,000 restored — if and when one can find one for sale.

Old airplanes are usually found languishing in some out-of-the-way airport. Yocke said he bought his Staggerwing in Walnut Ridge, Ark., six years ago, "before prices went out of sight."

Yocke said, "I didn't look at it as an investment in that sense, but it just worked out that way. That's another reason for buying an antique airplane; they don't depreciate like modern airplanes."

A look at Yocke's white biplane is a look at history. The Staggerwing was the first practical business airplane, and it made Beech's fortune.

At 200 mph on a 465-horsepower radial engine, Yocke said, "It was even faster than some military airplanes. This particular model was the beginning of business aviation."

Before the beginner runs out and buys the first tattered Piper Cub he finds, with the intention of restoring it to like-new condition, he should join the EAA, said Dick Holtz, executive vice-president of the Chicago AAA. By paying $20 membership dues, new members are put in contact with the world of antique aircraft, Holtz said.

The EAA believes in "education by association," Holtz said. The beginner receives training by watching experienced restorers work, rubbing shoulders with them, asking questions and occasionally pitching in to help, Holtz said. "And an awful lot of people will be real willing to come over to your place and help you restore a plane," he said.

The EAA offers the services of "Designee Inspectors," volunteers who regularly help homebuilders and restorers. The EAA also publishes a "Designee Newsletter," a series of "how to" restoration manuals and periodicals for its "Warbirds of America" and "Antique/Classic" divisions.

But doing your own work involves much time and patience. Holtz said the hardest part of restoring an airplane is "keeping at it. After you've been at it for a while you realize you have almost an interminable task. You're not talking about a couple of weeks, but a couple of years' work."

At the opposite end of the reconstruction spectrum is the CAF, an assembly of men and women with a reverent regard for all military flying machines built between 1939 and 1945.

The CAF maintains a "flying museum" in Harlingen, Tex. The museum boasts a line of all types of American fighters and bombers built during the war, plus representative samplings of Japanese, German and British airplanes. All aircraft are in flying condition.

The CAF's aim, according to its statement of objectives, is to restore and fly as many of the 300,000 American military aircraft built during the war they can find, "to perpetuate in the memory and hearts of all Americans the spirit in which these great planes were flown for the defense of our nation."

Finding and restoring World War II warbirds is a difficult, expensive task. The CAF has searched throughout the world for its warbirds. One of its members in 1969 brought six Thunderbolts back from Peru. Others are found, forgotten and neglected, in air force storage depots, awaiting destruction.

William D. Ross, of Winnetka, operator of the J. J. Tourek Manufacturing Co. in Elk Grove Village, rebuilds warbirds in his spare time.

Ross said, "There are no raw airplanes to pick up anymore. The sources are drying up. You can still find some — in India, in Central and South America."

"It's awfully expensive," Ross said. "Planes are few and far between, and anyone who has a spare part is holding on to it for his own airplane."

World War II airplanes invite high maintenance costs because of their construction as high-performance military machines, with all-metal airframes and piston engines that produce in excess of 2,000 horsepower. Well-tuned, they are a pilot's fantasy; but run-out and rusting, as most are originally found, they are financier's nightmare.

To maintain a Mustang, Ross said, costs $10,000 a year. To fly it costs $85 an hour in fuel. The Mustang gulps 100-octane aviation gasoline at a rate of between 55 and 58 gallons an hour, Ross said.

Thus, the necessity of the CAF, which pools funds of members to sponsor aircraft, Annual dues are $100; to become a squadron member, one pays $350. To sponsor a particular airplane could cost a single member thousands of dollars, depending on the expense of rebuilding and maintenance.

In return, CAF members receive the designation of "Colonel," and the satisfaction of having a piece of the action.

Skiles, a pilot for Texas International Airlines in Houston, enjoys the action. "I fly DC-9s for a living so I can come out here and fly this B-17 for fun."

Until 1967, Litton Industries flew the CAF's B-17 as a high-altitude camera ship. The CAF paid $100,000 for the ship, and painted it in combat markings of the 305th Bomb Group of the 8th Air Force. Today, Skiles flies it, on his own time, to air shows and fly-ins around the country.

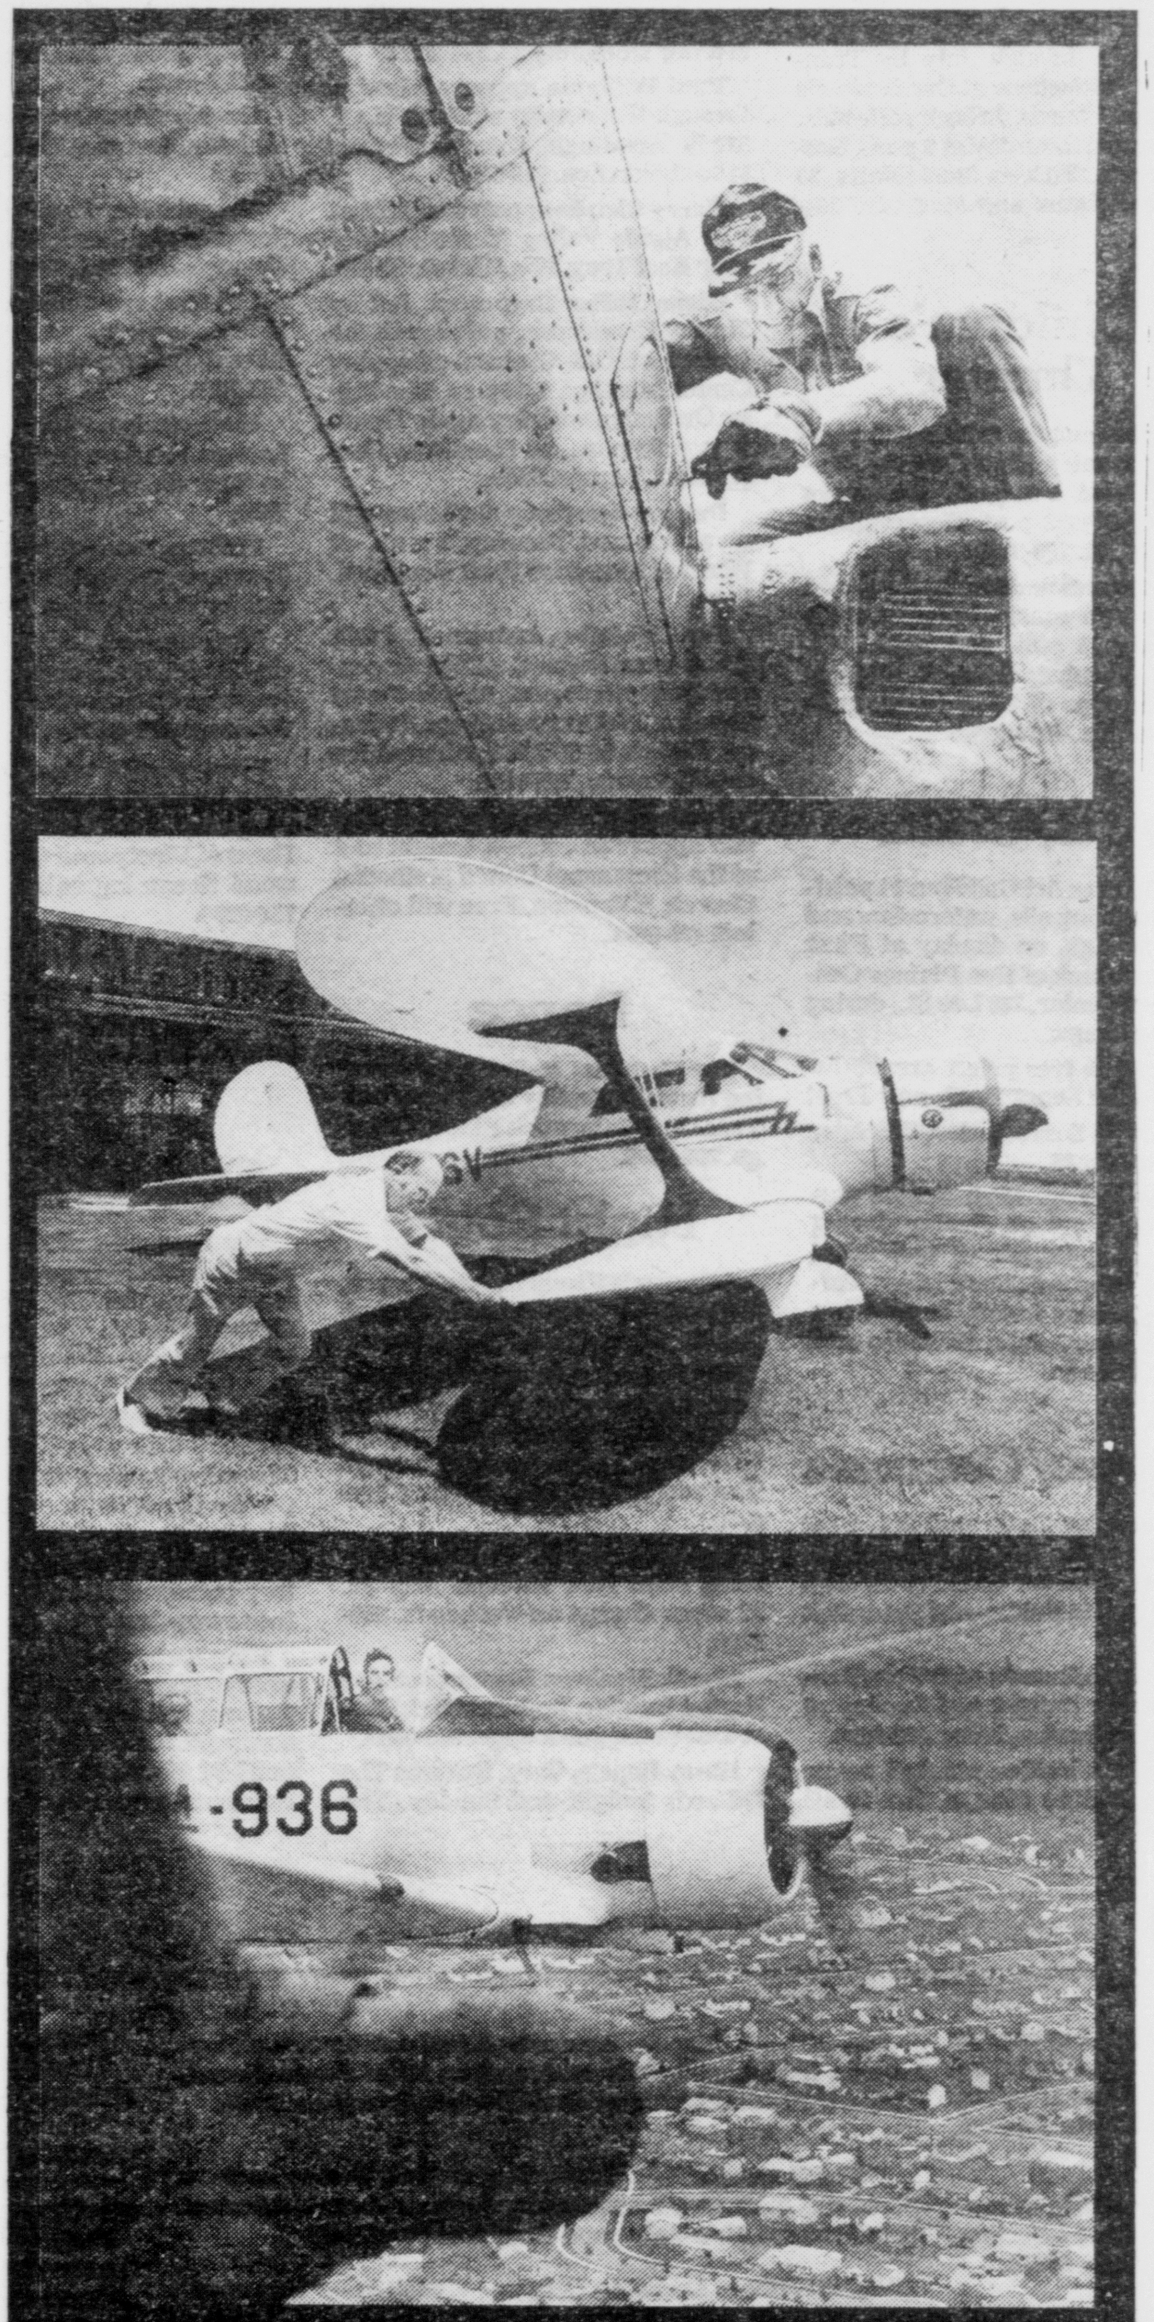
However, keeping the B-17 is expensive; it costs $400-an-hour flight time, Skiles said.

The CAF uses the B-17 in its reenactment of the Pearl Harbor attack of 1941. The CAF also has the dubious reputation of being the first antique aircraft organization in history to instigate an international incident, when its reenactment of the Hiroshima atomic bombing at its 1976 air show raised howls of indignation from the Japanese embassy in Washington, D.C.

The CAF flew its own B-29 for the Hiroshima reenactment. It will fly again at this year's CAF show in Harlingen, but the atomic bombing will not be included in the CAF's four-day extravanganza.

Holtz perhaps summed up best the feelings of those who forsake all other worldly pleasures to spend years dawdling over what the rest of mankind has long discarded as obsolete:

"It just makes me happy." §



Col. Van Skiles (top), of the Confederate Air Force, makes fine adjustments on the engine of his B-17, while Dr. Bern Yocke (center) uses muscle power to move his Beech "Staggerwing" from its hangar and the pilot of a World War II "Texan" trainer (bottom) flies a tight formation.

Persons interested in restoring antique airplanes may contact the following organizations:

- The Antique Airplane Assn. of the Greater Chicago Area. AAA Hangar, DuPage County Airport, Ill. Rte. 64, St. Charles, Ill. 60174. 377-9888.
- The Conferedate Air Force. Rebel Field, Harlingen, Tex. 78550. (800) 531-7346. The CAF will hold its annual 4-day air show, with performances by fighter and bomber aircraft of World War II, Oct. 6-9 in Harlingen.
- The Experimental Aircraft Assn., 11311 W. Forest Home Ave., Franklin, Wis. 53132. (414) 425-4860. The EAA will hold its annual fly-in July 30 - Aug. 6 at Wittman Field, Oshkosh. — D.I.

"Rollercoaster" — A good cast coasts through the unconvincing but mildly diverting thriller about a maniac extorting money by putting bombs on amusement park rides. (PG).

"Sorcerer" — Big, colorful, but impersonal suspense thriller about four outcasts trucking nitroglycerine through a South American jungle. Roy Scheider gives a strong performance, the visual effects are vividly convincing, and the tension groans to hair-raising proportions. Riding:

rides offered by the company to those looking at land in Galena Territory difficult. "Generally, people get a half hour ride unless I really fall in love with them," Tussing says. "And usually the salesman tells me he wants them back in not too long so he can spend extra time with them."

In addition, Tussing says, the horses seem to know if those on the promotional rides are high-faluting types who look down on cowboys and cowponies. "The horses pick on them," Tussing says.

The horses used for the trail rides, with the exception of a few owned by the riding center, are leased from the University of Wisconsin riding school for the summer. Those used on the rides are gentle, sensible animals who will safely tote 10-year-old children (the youngest accepted for rides) or novice adults around the trails.

In addition, the horses' status as school horses mean they know enough about proper riding and proper cues to respond willingly to a rider who understands some of the subtlety of horsemanship.

There are some things that the person who heads to Galena — or any other place where horses are rented — must expect, particularly if they know no more about riding than watching Western movies will give them.

For one thing, riding, particularly five hours of riding as provided in the overnight trail ride, is exercise and the novice can expect sore muscles.

In addition, while riding may look easy when John Wayne does it, sitting on a trotting horse without bouncing up and down with a death grip on the saddle horn takes instruction and practice — more practice than one trail ride can possibly give.

And finally, those whose cowboy fantasies include more galloping cavalry charges than slow, comfortable rides are likely to find little sympathy among the professional horsemen at the riding center.

"I sometimes have trouble convincing people that there's more to riding than racing around," Tussing says. "Too many people just want to see how fast they can do the trail. They never take time to stop and look at anything." §

Here's how to ride the overnight trail

Overnight trail rides are run at the Galena Territory as often as the staff of the riding center can get groups together. The rides need six or more persons, but the center will put together the groups with sufficient notice.

Children must be at least 10 years old. All rides are on horses, not ponies. The cost of the overnight ride is $30 per person plus tax. Sleeping bag rental is $4 extra and must be reserved in advance. Meals include steak and baked potatoes for dinner and sausage and eggs for breakfast. Two weeks notice is best for overnight rides.

For the one-hour daytime rides, advance reservations are not needed during the week, but the staff advises persons to call ahead on weekends. Rides are $5 per hour.

More information on the riding center and trail rides is available by calling 815-777-2373. — W.R.

South Dakota's famous Mount Rushmore

Etching designs on Black Hills gold jewelry

The nation's largest buffalo herd

Golden opportunities f fun in South Dakota's

by Katherine Rodeghier

You squat in the shallow creek, the icy water rushing around your ankles. For more than five minutes you have been at it, discarding useless rocks and pebbles and swishing the muddy solution around in the bottom of the saucer-like pan. Suddenly your eye catches a speck that glitters in the sun overhead. One more swish and you see it — a small, yellow flake. Your pulse quickens and instinctively you know you have found the real McCoy — gold.

Panning for gold in the rivers and streams of Southwest South Dakota is just one of the attractions this state has to offer the vacationer — especially the vacationer with a family.

Small in size as mountain ranges go, the Black Hills are chock full of things to see and do. Measuring 100 miles from north to south and 60 miles east to west in the southwest part of the state, the hills contain 1.3 million acres of public land.

In the south there are warm natural springs, the sculpture on Mt. Rushmore, and several caves worthy of exploring. There are state parks where herds of wildlife, most notably the buffalo, roam free and plenty of sites for campers to set up tent or park a trailer. There are towns straight out of the Old West and gold mines now more of a tourist attraction than a mining-for-profit venture.

And in the cities and towns that dot the countryside you can shop for some real bargains in Black Hills gold jewelry, Indian crafts and artifacts, Western artwork and more.

But perhaps the most fascinating of South Dakota's attractions is the gold that lies in 'them thar hills.' Since the 1800s it has been the lure that has brought seekers of adventure to this state.

The first person credited with discovering gold here is a miner in General Custer's expedition in the Black Hills. Horatio Ross found the yellow metal panning in French Creek in 1874. Within the next five years the Black Hills Gold Rush took nearly eight million dollars worth of gold from the hills. One of the most famous of these early gold panners is Potato Creek Johnny who found a nugget as big as a candy bar.

Panning for gold died out when deep mining became more profitable although it did have somewhat a resurgence during the 1930's when gold panners again converged on the Black Hills driven by hard times elsewhere.

Today's professional gold seekers go after the big stuff in the mines which leaves plenty of room for amateurs to pan for gold in the streams. If you are intent on panning for gold in South Dakota you should go to your local library and check out books on Black Hills ghost towns, gold mines, history, prospecting and geology to determine the best place to pan. When you arrive talk with local folks who can tell you where others have found gold.

One word of caution — don't be a claim jumper. Most of the Black Hills is public land but both private and company mining claims still exist. Be certain you are on public land or ask permission to enter private land.

Panning for gold demands a certain amount of equipment. Gold pans come in three diameters: 9-inch, 12-inch and 15-inch. The casual panner should opt for the 15-inch because it lets you begin panning with a great deal more raw gravel. Several outlets in the Black Hills sell pans and the average cost of a 15-inch is about $3.50. Panners will also need a shovel and a hat.

Travelers who feel uncertain about the panning technique can get some practice at a commercial panning area. At the Bobtail Placer Mine, between Deadwood and Lead, you can get a quick lesson in how to pan gold for just $2 and a visual demonstration of what gold flakes and gold nuggets look like. Another commercial mine is Rockerville Goldtown, 12 miles south of Rapid City, which charges $1.50 per person for a lesson.

As you look for gold remember that nature has done the hardest part of your work. She's eroded her treasure from gold-bearing ores and concentrated particles of free gold throughout the streambeds in the hills. Gold is very dense and heavy, a fact to keep in mind while prospecting. Your best bet is a fast-moving stream. Look for places where the current suddenly diminishes allowing gold to settle out. In streams that flow on bedrock the gold will be trapped in holes, pockets and other irregularities in the bedrock. Where the water runs through boulders or layered rocks, use the sand and grit from the crevices. As a general rule gold is likely to be hidden in the bottom-most layer of gravel in the streambed.

To begin panning, heap your pan full of gravel dug from places most likely to yield gold. Flood the pan with water, submerge it, and let it sit on the bottom of the creek. With your hands, stir and swish the gravel around in the pan. Leaves, sticks, humus, pine needles and mud will float up out of the pan and drift away in the current.

Next rinse off all rocks bigger than an inch in diameter and pitch them out of the pan making sure that mud and grit stuck to the rocks falls back into your pan. Hold the pan level and shake it vigorously from side to side. Any gold will sift its way to the bottom of the pan. Now face the current and tilt the pan about 30 degrees so the water flows in. Continue shaking the pan from side to side and gravel will begin to sift out over the lip of the pan and be carried away.

Continue panning until you're down to a couple tablespoons of material. This is your "pay dirt" and typically it will be mostly fine black sand and often it will contain bright red garnets about the size of match heads. Garnets, unless quite large and without flaws, are of no value except as souvenirs.

Drain practically all the water from your pan and give it a gentle swirl to spread your paydirt out thinly over the bottom of the pan. If you see any shiny, metallic substance that is bright yellow you know you're in luck. Gold "nuggets" are bigger than one-half inch, "pea gold" is the size of a pea, "fish" are flat and elongated flakes, and "flakes" are thin, flat wafers that are pin-head size and up. "Gold dust" is pure

As you examine your paydirt think small. Nuggets and pea gold are extraordinarily rare. Most gold occurs as fish, flakes and gold dust. Use tweezers or the tip of your little finger to remove gold from your pan and cache it safely in your "poke." A small glass vial works just fine. Just about any jeweler can verify whether or not you've found real gold but there are a couple of tests you can make while you're on the site. First, gold is shiny whether it's wet or dry which makes it easy to differentiate from yellow rocks. Second, gold is very soft. With your fingernail you can dent or bend a gold flake.

From start to finish, it takes an amateur about 10 minutes to process a pan of gravel. During the gold rush fifty pans were considered a day's work for a seasoned miner. Remember that not every batch of gravel "pans out" so if you don't get lucky keep in mind that you can always set your gold pan on the mantlepiece back home where it's sure to stimulate conversation about your prospecting days in South Dakota.

After you have had your fill of panning for gold you might want to see what a real working mine looks like. Homestake Gold Mine, the largest producing gold mine in North America, is situated high in the northern Black Hills near Lead, S.D. The mine has been producing since the spring of 1876 and in its years nearly 2 million pounds of gold have been recovered from this lode. Two brothers, Fred and Moses Manuel, first laid claim on Homestake but after mining the lode for a year they sold to a combine that included George Hearst. The sale price was $70,000 and within a century Homestake produced more than 1 billion dollars worth of precious metal. Hearst's profits would buy Anaconda and Mexican silver mines and eventually help establish the William Randolph Hearst publishing empire.

The Lead Civic Assoc. conducts surface tours through Homestake until Oct. 31 daily except Sundays. Tours last about 1½ hour and cost 50 cents for grade school children, 75 cents for high school and $1 for adults.

Tours of once profitable but now historic mines are also available in the Black Hills. The Broken Boot Gold Mine, southwest of Deadwood gives underground tours. The guided tours show how mines operated in the days of primitive equipment and muscle power. Tours cost $1 for adults and 50 cents for children.

In the old town of Keystone, just east of the main road to Mt. Rushmore, the Big Thunder Gold Mine has guided tours into its tunnels. The guided tour includes commentary on the history of Keystone. Visitors also get to mine their own free gold samples.

Hill City, S.D. southwest of Rapid City, has a new historic park complete with one-room cabin, gold ore stamp mill and mine shaft. The 14 by 20-foot miner's cabin illustrates typical living conditions of the 1880's and 90's and is outfitted with typical pioneer items. The stamp mill is set up on the hill in working order for demonstration purposes. The mine itself is a 300-foot-long hard rock tunnel in the hillside which has been outfitted with mining equipment of the last century. There is no admission charge for tours.

Within a few miles of Hill City are numerous hamlets, ghost towns and abandoned mines bearing silent witness to the Black Hills gold rush. The old gold camps have names reflecting the dreams of the miners — Camp Prospect, Golden Slipper, and Eureka. One ghost town has a particularly appropriate name, however. Four miles east of Hill City is Oblivion. It's still on the map but Oblivion really was never anything more than a railroad siding. Whoever named it, named it right.

Explorers of ghost towns and abandoned mines should be cautious since these can be dangerous places. Deteriorated above-ground works are no place to climb around. Old airshafts just under the surface can suddenly collapse. Old mine shafts should never be entered since their timber shoring will probably be rotted out.

Amateur prospectors still lusting for gold can return home with a sample of authentic Black Hills gold in the form of Black Hills gold jewelry, a craft that dates back to the gold rush days. There are rings, cuff links, necklaces, earrings, brooches, tie bars and other pieces. Each has the distinctive delicate grape and leaf pattern in colors of pale pinks, greens and yellows. It is sold nationwide but the most comprehensive selections can be found in leading South Dakota jewelry and gift shops. Prices range from about $10 for a small item such as a tie tack up to $165 for massive men's rings and $400 for an intricately designed women's bracelet.

Other types of jewelry creations can be found in silver, copper, beads, agate and petrified wood. Indian pottery and ceramics are other popular gift items. Indian arts and crafts, particularly bead work, are going through a new renaissance. All sorts of objects are available — earrings, chokers, medallions, necklaces, belts, moccasins, headbands, watch bands and barretts.

But a word of warning to anyone purchasing Indian made crafts. Do not try to buy an eagle feather unless you are an enrolled member of a recognized tribe. Others are not allowed to own one and confiscation and stiff fines have been levied on persons having an eagle feather or any other part of the bird in their possession.

Many travelers choose to camp as they explore South Dakota's Black Hills. More than 10,500 federal, state and private campsites are located in the state in addition to numerous city parks that permit overnight camping.

Using camp as a base of operation vacationers head for the hills ready for a few days or a few weeks of exploring. In the southern range of the Black Hills is Hot Springs and Evans Plunge swimming pool. Evans Plunge is the last reminder of a Hot Springs which was listed among the leading health spas of the nation. As mineral baths fell from fashion only Evans Plunge survives as the largest indoor natural warm water pool in the world.

Five miles north of Custer Korczak Ziolokowski continues to work on his mountain sculpture of Crazy Horse. The sculpture will be even larger than Mt. Rushmore when completed and will be carved in the round. Visitors are welcome at the memorial throughout the year.

Scattered throughout the hills are several limestone caves nine of which are open to the public for tours. The two most famous of these caves are Jewel Cave and Wind Cave.

Jewel Cave National Monument, about 13 miles west of Custer, is well-known to avid cave explorers for its beauty and because it

The cave offers visitors a choice of tours until Oct. 1 this year. There's the popular scenic tour, 1 hour and 15 minutes covering ½ mile of the cave on paved trails, a 1½-hour historical tour through a more primitive area of the cave and a 4-hour spelunking tour which goes well off the main trails.

Wind Cave National Park, located 33 miles southeast of Jewel Cave features an extensive cave system situated under a 44-square mile wildlife park. Visitors driving through the park should see free roaming buffalo, elk and pronghorn antelope as well as prairie dogs, deer and birds. The park staff offers nature hikes twice a day and a campfire program is held nightly. Regular and long scenic tours of the cave are available and a historic candlelight tour takes visitors through more primitive areas.

There are many places in the Black Hills where travelers can observe wildlife roaming free. Custer State Park is a popular attraction for this reason. The game loop road through the park will, almost without fail, produce a herd of buffalo that can be observed safely from your car. The buffalo are part of the nation's largest buffalo herd. Because of these animals five major movie productions were partially filmed here including "Chief Crazy Horse" in 1953, "The Last Hunt" in 1955 and "How the West Was Won" in 1961.

Vacationers can buy a buffalo hide at an auction in the park and if you're a sports enthusiast you can enter the North American Championship Buffalo Chip Flip held in Pierre each August. The record throw is more than 200 feet.

Along the game loop trail in the park are elk, deer, antelope and an occasional coyote or big horn sheep. Park personnel recommend early morning or late afternoon as the best viewing hours. But if the game trail fails to produce any wildlife Iron Mountain Road, leading north out of the park, will always have a hungry crew of wild burros eagerly a aiting a hand-out. The burros are great panhandlers and never miss an opportunity to get their heads in the car window. Their origin dates back to the gold rush days when the best partner a miner could have stood on four legs.

Iron Mountain Road leads out of the park and into the National Forest where the traveler gets an astounding view of the Hills with the focal point of this panorama being Mt. Rushmore. The highway was carved into the mountain in such a fashion that it maneuvers vehicles into the most advantageous position for observing the sculpture.

A word of caution to those pulling trailers, however. The tunnel-framed vistas and intricate bridges were designed and built in the 1930s to enhance the scenic beauty of the area. They were not built to be practical. Visitors can best enjoy the drive if not burdened with the load of a trailer. Dragging a 20-foot albatross through a series of one lane tunnels and twisting hair-pin curves can be unnerving. Better to park the trailer early in the day at a campsite and enjoy the ride.

Few people realize that the monument of Mt. Rushmore is not completed and probably never will be completed. Sculptor Gutzon Borglum's plans called for the figures of the four presidents — Washington, Jefferson, Theodore Roosevelt and Lincoln — to be carved to the waist instead of just the head. He also planned to construct a museum and next to the figures he envisioned an inscription to be chiseled five inches deep into the rock with gilded letters visible from a distance of three miles. One by one these plans were discarded. In 1927 President Calvin Coolidge promised to prepare the wording for the inscription, the text of which would have to be short because of the limited amount of space. Borglum unceremoniously edited Coolidge's first two chapters to which Coolidge took offense and refused to proceed with the writing.

Rushmore is not the only mountain in the Black Hills. The tallest is Harney Peak at 7,242 feet. A visit to the top, either by foot or horseback, can be a terrific day's outing. The Sioux considered Harney Peak to be the center of the world, and after a visit to this impressive granite cap, anyone would understand why.

Floral Valley northwest of Harney Peak was the subject of a passage in the journal kept by General Custer during his campaign in South Dakota. "In no public or private park have I ever seen such a profuse display of flowers," he wrote. "Every step of our march was amidst flowers of the most exquisite colors and perfume, so luxuriant in growth that men plucked them without dismounting from the saddle. It was a strange sight to glance back at the advancing columns of cavalry and behold the men with beautiful bouquets in their hands, while the head gear of their horses was decorated with wreaths of flowers fit to crown a queen of May."

In the northern Black Hills are such points of interest as historic Deadwood and the Adams Museum. Downtown Deadwood has been partially restored to its turn-of-the-century look and offers visitors a taste of the Old West. The Old Style #10 Saloon has its doors open every day and the on-duty bartender will gladly point out such items of interest as Wild Bill Hickok's marriage license tacked up on the wall. Not far from the saloon is Deadwood's boot hill where the grave of Wild Bill Hickok and Calamity Jane lay side by side, just the way Jane asked that it be.

Whether you are panning for gold, shopping for Western art, or feeding wild burros South Dakota has much to offer the traveler. And even if you don't hit paydirt during your stay here you are bound to return with many golden memories. §

Farm visitors can lend a hand at feeding time.

Spend a day in the country at Green Meadows Farm

If you and your kids are beginning to believe that green vegetables grow in cans and plastic freezer bags, maybe it's time you had a refresher course in what rural life is all about.

Visit Green Meadows, a recreation farm located near Waterford in Southeastern Wisconsin. The 80-acre farm is open from 10 a.m. to dusk every day just for city folks who want to get out into the fresh country air.

During July farm visitors can pick their own vegetables — green and yellow beans, cucumbers, tomatoes and peppers. You pay for the amount you have picked as you leave. If you wait until fall you have your pick of squash and pumpkins (pumpkins are given away free during the month of October).

Weekend

Admission to the farm is $2.50 per person (no charge for children under age 2) which includes a two-hour tour of the farm. Once inside you take a horse-drawn hayride, slide and jump in straw stacks and a haymow, feed and pet more than 300 farm animals, take a pony ride, visit the farm museum in the granary, or take off on a nature trail. The farm also has plenty of picnic tables, a flower garden, pond with geese and ducks and a saddle. shop.

Home cooked country meals are served in the 140-year-old farm house done in Greek Revival Architecture. For a quick sandwich and a soft drink there's the "Korn Krib." Jams, jellies and honey can be purchased in what once was a chicken coop.

The farm is run by Bob and Coni Keyes, who turned their beef and hog farm into an educational and recreation facility 12 years ago. The farm is run by the Keyes family (nine of the family's eleven children are still living at home). Retired farmers from the Waterford area also pitch in driving the teams of Belgium draft horses that pull the hay wagon.

Green Meadows farm also offers group parties, hayride parties, square dance festivities, overnight outings and group picnics. In the winter organized sleigh rides can be arranged.

Overnight accommodations are available in heated barns for $4.75 per person. The farm supplies a barn cot or you can bring your own sleeping bag. The price includes an hour-long hayride and use of all the farm facilities.

Green Meadows is a little more than a 1-hour drive from the Northwest suburbs and can be reached by taking I-94 to Hwy. 20, west on 20 three miles past Waterford. Information on the farm is available from the Keyes at Box 182, Waterford, Wis. 53185 (414-534-2891).

On the go

Two vacations for the price of one on Eastern

How would you like to take an 8-day vacation this summer — and then enjoy another 4-day holiday free next fall?

Eastern Airlines is offering just such a program whereby travelers purchasing a special 8-day/7-night vacation package receive a complimentary 4-day/3-night "Second Vacation Bonus" later in 1977. Air fare is not included with either vacation.

The airline's program offers packages in Miami Beach, Ft. Lauderdale and Hollywood, Florida; Freeport, Bahamas; San Juan and Fajardo, Puerto Rico; and St. Thomas. The first vacation can be taken anytime through Sept. 6; the second can be enjoyed from Sept. 9 through Dec. 15, 1977 at any participating location and is not restricted to the original destination.

The "Second Vacation Bonus" includes air-conditioned accommodations with private bath that are equal to the accommodations of the original stay. As an added bonus, the second vacation is transferable and may be presented as a gift. However, the certificate is non-refundable and subject to availability at the participating hotel.

The following price quotations for the 8-day/7-night vacation do not include air fare and include meals only when stated.

On Miami Beach, vacationers can stay at the Fontainebleau Hotel where they receive a "Millionaire's Boat Cruise," complimentary greens fees and transportation to the from golf courses, indoor or outdoor tennis and complimentary bowling and ice skating for $144.95 to $176.45 per person, double occupancy.

In Ft. Lauderdale, the Lauderdale Beach Club offers roundtrip airport-hotel transfers, sauna facilities and nightly entertainment for $80.50 to $87.50 per person, double. In Hollywood, the Diplomat East offers unlimited use of day and night tennis courts, entertainment in five lounges, cocktail party and roundtrip airport-hotel transfers for $146 to $181 per person, double.

Three locations in Freeport give vacationers a choice of the Bahama Princess, Princess Tower or Castaways Resort. The first two have complimentary tennis, greens fees on two 28-hole courses and sightseeing tours for $118 to $167 per person, double. The third offers city sightseeing and welcome cocktail for $111 to $153 per person, double.

Fusing five personalities into one

by Bernadine M. Rechner

He is relaxed, self-assured, easy to talk to — this man who has been to Hell, left part of himself and come back.

Henry Hawksworth, in Chicago to promote his book, is reveling in the joys of being a whole person after forty years in which his mind was fragmented into five different personalities.

"The Five of Me" is Hawksworth's story, the chronicle of his affliction with hysteric disassociation, or multiple personality, and of his ultimate cure.

Once considered a rare phenomenon limited to females, Hawksworth debunks that theory by his own history and believes the incidence of multiple personality is much more common, afflicting men and women in equal numbers.

Hawksworth also believes our society masks the true numbers of male multiples by the greater latitude accorded the actions of men.

"If a woman acted as I had, they would have had her hospitalized long before me. If a man goes out and drinks up a storm, has a wife and family and, at the same time, has a woman on the side, is playing around, he gets locker room praise. A woman — she's shot down. She would seek help, where the men do not."

Part of the problem, Hawksworth says, is the macho image of the male, his inability to admit weakness and to seek help.

"I believe there are far more men out there that have my illness, maybe a hundred thousand of them. I believe this illness is not as rare as everyone says. I just think it's not diagnosed."

Hawksworth and Dr. Ralph Allison, the psychiatrist who assisted in fusing his five personalities into one, appeared recently before the American Psychiatric Association meeting in Toronto to present the case and outline the cure, the "game plan" developed by Allison.

Many of the psychiatrists were sufficiently interested in multiple personality to speak to Hawksworth individually and none of them, Hawksworth says, expressed doubts about the authenticity of his case.

The psychiatric community, however, is split on the question of hysteric disassociation.

"Freud didn't accept the phenomenon," Hawksworth explains, "and that's why many psychiatrists today have trouble with it. They see it in their offices, and I heard doctor after doctor admit they see it in their offices, and they are afraid even to go to their own peers and ask for help for fear of being labeled. Those are the very conservative, Freudian-based psychiatrists but that is changing. Psychiatry is generally beginning to recognize this illness and more and more psychiatrists are learning to cure it."

Vestiges of Hawksworth's other personalities remain although Johnny, the violent one, was "left in Hell." Hawksworth feels Jerry is still with him though what Jerry represents is uncertain - perhaps he is a creation of the psychiatrist, perhaps he is what some of us call conscience. "In some way, he may be the religious aspect of the mind."

Traces of Peter remain also. "You know, touch is a major form of information gathering and I still have that very childlike trait. I must touch everything."

The question of possession/exorcism "is a hard one for me to handle," Hawksworth says. "There's no question that part of the psychodrama the doctor performs can be likened to an exorcism. I haven't tried to interpret that. I haven't tried to put a belief system around it."

Hawksworth is optimistic about the future. He is enjoying the promotional tour which Dr. Allison encouraged him to undertake. Now a friend to friend, rather than a doctor/patient, relationship, Allison felt he could handle the stress and benefit from it.

He is pleased with the financial considerations which the published book represents. After being jailed more than 20 times and having lost 34 jobs, that kind of success is important to him.

He has a good job near his home in the San Francisco Bay area, his children are supportive and his marriage "is getting stronger and stronger."

The future augurs well for Henry Hawksworth though he does not know what it will bring. "I'm going to put my money in the bank and live a normal life." He doesn't think there will be any more books or speaking engagements. "I'm not that ambitious nor anxious to live in a goldfish bowl," he says. "But who knows what's out there? I'll just meet it as it comes."

"I delight in everything," says the man who once had five personalities. Now he is a unified person who has a zest for life, a vibrancy and enthusiasm for getting on with it.

The game plan for a journey from madness

THE FIVE OF ME: THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF A MULTIPLE PERSONALITY by Henry Hawksworth with Ted Schwarz (Contemporary Books, $9.95).

Reviewed by Bernadine M. Rechner

One approaches this kind of book with a certain amount of skepticism even though schizophrenia, or split personality, has long been an accepted psychiatric phenomenon.

"The Five of Me" is the autobiography of Henry Hawksworth, a multiple personality, the victim of hysteric disassociation in which five distinct personalities warred for control of his body.

It is an interesting, even frightening story which suffers in the telling.

Co-authored with Ted Schwarz, it is the tale of a lonely, abused child whose father was determined to make a man of him and whose mother could scarcely cope with the problems life wrought. At the age of three, Hawksworth, in self-defense, invented imaginary playmates and initiated the fragmentation of his personality which would persist for almost forty years.

The Johnny personality was conjured up to take the rap for the child's bad actions in the hope of escaping the inevitable punishment. Throughout Hawksworth's illness, it is Johnny, prone to excessive drinking, who gets him into trouble with women, with the law and with employer after employer.

Peter is the sensitive, gentle personality — the writer of poetry, lover of beauty and flowers whom the author describes as a child "scarcely seven years old emotionally."

Dana, the third personality, is serious, studious, emotionless. With his appearance at age three, Henry disappears until, almost forty years later, fusion therapy begins to reunite his fragmented mind. It is Dana's life that is the basis of this book and it is he who is subject to blackouts and periods of amnesia during which one of the other personalities takes charge. It is the Dana personality who marries and has three children, who loses job after job, and who lies to cover the actions of the others because he cannot remember them.

A fourth personality, Phil, exists to keep the body out of physical trouble and a fifth personality, Jerry, emerges during therapy apparently to assist the psychiatrist in fusing the parts into a single whole.

A certain amount of confusion can be expected in a work of this nature but the authors seem to have increased, rather than clarified, it in an attempt to add suspense and build interest. There are some problems with the shifting from the first person to the third person narrator and it is not until almost the end of the book that some explanation is offered for the questions which arise from the beginning.

One wonders why Hawksworth's teacher calls him "Henry" while his mother calls him "Dana." The author's recollection of his actions as a child of two and three breeds skepticism with which the reader must contend throughout most of the volume.

The characterizations of each personality are sometimes contradictory and not always credible - perhaps because they are figments of an ailing mind. Johnny's language is stilted; Peter carries the allusion of homosexuality, rather than childishness, for much of the book; Phil's flippancy is unexpected and out of character.

If the reader considers the vagaries of the human mind, and what it is capable of, Hawksworth's story is terrifying for the 'normal' human make-up includes degrees of all his personalities - the anger, the sensitive poetic, the studious unemotional, the self-protective moods we all experience.

The unimaginative language of "The Five of Me" detracts from its emotional impact; there is perhaps too much telling and not enough showing, some peeking into the minds of neighbors and acquaintances.

In spite of its faults, the book holds the reader's attention and has an intriguing flavor of possession and exorcism.

An honest look at flight safety by lawyer pilot

CLEARED FOR THE APPROACH, F. LEE BAILEY IN DEFENSE OF FLYING by F. Lee Bailey, with John Greenya (Prentice-Hall, $9.95).

Reviewed by Dave Ibata

In 1976, thousands of pilots in the United States were the recipients of a gift, courtesy of the Federal Aviation Administration: A 42-page booklet, upon which was printed the declaration, "Critical to Flying Safety."

Contained within the booklet was a "Pilot/Controller Glossary." Its purpose was to be sure pilots in the air and controllers on the ground spoke the same language.

The booklet seemed a rather mundane addition to the aviator's library, until one recalled what prompted its publication: the Dec. 1, 1974 crash of a TWA airliner that killed 92 persons.

At the heart of the tragedy was a ground controller's last radio transmission to the doomed jetliner: "Cleared for the approach."

The pilot misunderstood, and flew his plane into a mountain.

It is with this tragedy in mind that noted defense attorney and licensed pilot F. Lee Bailey begins his defense of aviation, "Cleared for the Approach."

Bailey is confident of modern aeronautical safety — so confident he introduces readers first to the worst possible side of aviation: that of the crash, the last few minutes of a fatal flight.

But, Bailey says, such an accident is extremely rare, and he produces facts to convince the reader of flying's admirable safety record.

Bailey is an experienced pilot, with flight time in jets and piston-driven aircraft. He owns Enstrom Helicopters, of Menominee, Mich. His sentiments toward aviation predictably lean to the positive.

However, Bailey retains a lawyer's objectivity as he scrutinizes the merits and faults of modern aviation. He paints an honest, total picture — "warts and all." He shows that despite some spectacular accidents, the United States boasts the best safety record of any nation for private and commercial aviation.

On the "warts" side, Bailey analyzes the doomed TWA Flight 514. Here the pilot misinterpreted a controller's instructions, "Cleared for the approach," to mean, "Cleared to descend to minimum altitude on final approach to the runway."

The pilot, flying "through the soup" and relying on his aircraft instruments and an instrument approach chart for navigation, refused to believe the chart. He broke the rules; he "busted" minimums, and descended below the summit of a small mountain that lay between his airplane and the runway at Dulles International Airport, Washington, D.C.

Pilot error? Partially; that and a tragic misunderstanding.

Thus the booklet, and an order by the FAA to pilots to remember just what "cleared for the approach" really meant.

And, belatedly, a requirement that aircraft be equipped with a "Ground Proximity Warning System," a device that could have averted the 1974 crash. Too often, safety follows tragedy, Bailey says. But much already has been done to ensure safe flying, he adds.

Bailey describes how the FAA evolved out of the old Civil Aeronautics Administration to become the strict regulator of aviation manufacturing and maintenance, stern policeman of flight training and pilot conduct and stringent overseer of the vast network of communications and navigation facilities of the National Airspace System.

Bailey also describes watchdogs of the FAA: Congressional subcommittees, general aviation organizations, and unions of pilots and ground controllers.

He tells of his own experiences as one of the founders of the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization (PATCO), a group formed in response to unfair, unsafe labor practices of the FAA.

Finally, Bailey writes of his own love of flying, justifying why he admires, and places his trust in, modern aviation.

Overall, Bailey has written an excellent overview of modern aviation — a very thorough, convincing argument in favor of modern flight.

New scene for assassination: at Wimbledon

THE FINALISTS by Russell Braddon (Atheneum, $7.95).

Reviewed by Charlie Dickinson

Does the world need another assassination novel?

Probably not. But, in the case of Russell Braddon's "The Finalists" you might be forgiven for curling up with yet another member of the breed.

There is a tendency to give up at first on this story of two world-class tennis players, an Australian and a recently defected Russian. Braddon takes great pains to develop a friendship between Gary King and Vissarion Tsarapkin (you attach the nationalities).

An impossibly hokey defection scene, with various good guys using tennis rackets to turn away gun-wielding KGB agents, is more than enough to put the reader off for good.

But give it a little time.

Gradually, Braddon tightens the focus of the story as it moves through the early rounds of Wimbledon. Tsarapkin and King advance to the men's singles finals and, you might be surprised to discover, the book is only half finished. From what has come before, you wonder what Braddon could concoct to fill the rest of the book.

King is ranked second in the world, a competent, sometimes brilliant player who, at 24, will soon be past his prime. Tsarapkin (modeled a bit after Sweden's Bjorn Borg) is a teenage phenom, totally enamored with the art of tennis and more concerned with playing the 'perfect' match than with anything as trivial as winning.

King, amiable veteran loved by all, and Tsarapkin, the boyish genius who enthralls the masses just by warming up, are matched in the ultimate Wimbledon final.

It is then, with 16,000 tennis fans perched about Centre Court, hardly able to pick a favorite, that the pulse of "The Finalists" begins to throb.

The Royal Family, most notably the Queen, are courtside for the championship match.

The fellow behind the assassination plot has made the following conditions: transfer the Queen's Koh-i-Noor diamond from the Tower of London to a remote court at Wimbledon by helicopter or the Queen and the Wimbledon champion will be killed.

These ultimatums are delivered to the Queen, various officials of Wimbledon and to the finalists. King, possessed of a quick temper that might choose to immediately confront the killer, is kept ignorant of developments; Tsarapkin almost welcomes the challenge: he no longer has to worry about winning, only keeping the match going; a development that perfectly suits his style of play, his philosophy of tennis.

Braddon demonstrates his narrative skills simply by getting us through his saccharin first half (a welcome ban on this, if it comes) and then making the second half tingle like a well-played Wimbledon final.

BILLY BEDAMNED, LONG GONE BY by Patricia Beatty (Morrow Junior Books, $6.95, ages 10 to 14).

Reviewed by Linda Punch

When Merle and Graham Tucker start out on an automobile trip with their "very modern" mother, they expect to have some adventures.

It is 1929 and their mother has flaunted all tradition by not only learning to drive a car, but daring to make a cross country trip with only Grandmother, the two children and the family dog. Their adventure, however, comes unexpectedly, not as part of the planned journey but in chance meeting with their Great-uncle Rudd Quiney. It is recounted in "Billy Bedamned, Long Gone By," a novel by Patricia Beatty.

Rudd, an old Texas cowboy, is the black-sheep of the Quiney family. For forty years, Grandmother had no contact with him and even refused to acknowledge him to members of her family. She will not divulge the reason for the break even to her daughter.

The Tuckers are unexpectedly reunited with Rudd when Mother injuries her wrist and can't continue the trip. They find shelter in the small Texas town of MacRae, the home of Rudd and his brother Hoyt.

For Merle, the stay is an unpleasant one. Rudd delights in telling tall tales of his youth, including numerous versions of how he lost his ear. Merle dislikes the old man, who she considers to be a common liar and she watches in amazement as her grandmother, mother and brother are charmed by the old cowboy.

In the end, Merle comes to understand her great-uncle and his need to tell tall tales about his life. And she also eventually learns the truth about his missing ear, a story which rivals the tall tales for excitement.

"Billy Bedamned" is written for children ages 10 to 14 years. While some younger children might find it difficult to read, older children should have no problems.

Mrs. Beatty fills the book with descriptions not only of 1929 America but also of images of the Old West. The book is filled with tales of cattle drives, Civil War battles and Indian raids. The author researched the history of both eras to ensure authenticity.

"Billy Bedamned" is the latest in a series based on the Quiney clan of Texas.

Polio epidemic disturbs lull of 50s growing up

TIME AND PLACE, by Bryan Woolley (Dutton, $8.95).

Reviewed by Wandalyn Rice

"The schoolhouse was like a bride on the eve of her wedding, rid of the loneliness of the long summer, bright with expectation, but still a virgin."

That sentence, with its clear and poignant imagery, appears in the fifth paragraph of Brian Woolley's novel about coming of age in a small Texas town.

The plot in Woolley's second novel wobbles in places and ends with a curiously incomplete non-ending but the strength and clarity of Woolley's narrative and his ability to construct word pictures give the book a resonance that rewards the reader.

The story is about Kevin Adams, high school senior, football hero, and his coming to manhood in the early 1950's.

In the course of the book, Adams, a likable but unfocused youth, confronts the polio epidemic that cripples his best friend and kills a boyhood companion, has an affair with a Mexican maid determined to keep him away from her daughter and marries the daughter, his true love, despite community disapproval of Mexican-Anglo intermarriage.

Some of the book's characters, though their parts are relatively minor, are as finely honed as any in contemporary fiction. Eduardo Rodriquez, the school custodian; Jay Eisenbarger, the dedicated high school principal; and Coach Wilson, the ambitious football coach who sees his season ruined by the epidemic, leave lasting impressions.

Other members of Woolley's cast are less successful. There is a curious shallowness in the portrayal of Kevin's mother, who quietly banishes him when he announces his marriage plans. And fundamentalist preacher Willie Joe Callahan, who loses his wife and his vocation as an indirect result of the polio epidemic, sometimes seems a mere caricature.

These flaws are easy to overlook, however, in a book that creates such a clear sense of, in the words of the title, "time and place." The fear and desperation that polio, a mysterious plague, brings to Fort Appleby in 1952 is palpable in the book's pages.

Parts of the book are reminiscent of the films "The Last Picture Show" or "Summer of '42," but somehow Woolley manages to avoid the pitfalls of soggy sentimentality, probably by avoiding first person narrative.

Instead of telling the story through any one character's eyes, Woolley uses the time-honored but today rare technique of the omniscient narrator. And that simple device gives him the ability to distance himself and the reader enough from his subject to make blurry images clear and greyed colors bright.

Fort Appleby, Texas, in "Time and Place" emerges as the sort of place that murders dreams. And, ultimately, the polio epidemic proves a liberating force for one of its victims.

That kind of clear, ironic sense of the unpredictability of reality is the most lasting quality of the book. Reading it is a moving experience.

Feminist's story of private pain, public struggles

GOING TOO FAR by Robin Morgan (Random House, $10)

Reviewed by Nancy I. Reese

Subtitled "The Personal Chronicle of a Feminist," Robin Morgan's book "Going Too Far" is that and much more. It is a personal chronicle of the feminist movement through the words of a woman who has lived and grown in the movement.

Morgan edited the feminist anthology "Sisterhood is Powerful" (1970) and then spent the next four years traveling the country, lecturing, organizing and advising women's groups. The anthology and the traveling are mentioned throughout the book. Married, with a son, she has also published two volumes of poetry, "Monster" (1972) and "Lady of the Beasts" (1976).

"You're going too far," women are told when they ask for abortion on demand, pay for housewives, 24-hour day care, equal work for equal pay, but in her introduction Morgan says no: "There is no 'too far' " for women demanding equality.

After these and other introductory remarks on herself and feminism, Morgan presents a series of letters written to her husband. They show her struggle of growth as a woman and an artist before the women's movement.

"Yes, I'm reeking with self-pity, my dear, as I plod through laundry and cleaning and cooking and bills and bank accounts and insurance and ordering books and theater tickets and keeping up with your correspondence as well as mine and running the errands and making the telephone calls . . . I'm tired of all this, K. Tired of doing the things I actually love to do: cook, clean, etc. . . . Tired of your equality-in-our-marriage talk, which I've always heartily seconded, silently planning the dinner or how to get to the bank on time meanwhile."

They are very personal letters. Yet Morgan, and others in the women's movement, believe the personal is political and must be shared.

In the next several sections of the book, Morgan reprints, each with an explanatory note, articles published in the radical (and not so radical) press and written during her involvement in the new left and the women's movement.

They include articles about her membership in WITCH (Women's International Terrorist Conspiracy from Hell); the now classic "Goodbye to All That," a farewell to the New Left; articles she wrote for "Rat" and, as she became involved solely in the women's movement, articles on radical feminism.

In the last section of the book she presents a series of articles, never before published, on her current thoughts relating to feminism. She explores the generally taboo subjects of sado-masochistic fantasies and paranoia. She also has written an amusing play on art and feminism.

Finally she presents her theory of metaphysical feminism — well-thought out and closely related to her poetry.

She writes, "When I think, then, of metaphysical feminism, I think not only of an all-encompassing feminist vision which goes literally beyond the physical (yet never leaves it behind) but which is in its very form related to those seventeenth-century English (metaphysical) poets. An obsession with love has been at the heart of women's concerns — and in fact of feminists' concerns — for millennia, . . . It is the insistence on the connections, the demand for synthesis, the refusal to be narrowed into desiring less than everything — that is so much the form of metaphysical poetry and of metaphysical feminism."

All the articles are extremely well-written, surprisingly so for having been written during the '60s, and the New Left rhetoric era. None of the articles have been edited, which gives the reader the flavor and color of the period during which the articles were written.

While sharing her public life of writing and traveling which gave so much to the women's movement of the past, Robin Morgan also gives of her private life and philosophies which will shape the women's movement of the future.

Big business terrorism in the Far East

TEMPLE DOGS by Robert L. Duncan (William Morrow and Co., Inc., $8.95)

Reviewed by Jeff Trimble

The suspense/intrigue novel has evolved through a series of stages in the last decade. Following the "Failsafe" era of nuclear global disaster, the emphasis shifted to public figures, as in "The President's Plane is Missing," or "Seven Days in May."

More recently, violence and corruption in government dealings has dominated intrigue novels, as in "The Eiger Sanction."

"Temple Dogs" by Robert L. Duncan ("Dragons at the Gate") may usher in a new era for suspense/intrigue novels. That is the Era of Big Business, and it concerns today's realities of multi-national corporations and their dealings in a changing world.

"Temple Dogs" is the story of ESK/International, a huge conglomerate, and William Corbett, an ESK vice president and chief company trouble shooter.

When South Korean government officials begin to blackmail ESK for additional payments on company holdings in the country, Corbett is summoned to deal with the situation.

The episode becomes more involved as Corbett is accused of illegally obtaining and selling arms through the company for a huge personal profit. He is then framed in the murder of his South Korean contact, and blamed for bungling company efforts to end the blackmail.

Corbett quickly realizes that a faction in ESK is behind the efforts to discredit him. He had been close to Erikson, company president, and can't understand why the company would want to ruin him.

Corbett's adversary is another vice president, ex-general Klein. Klein has visions of world power for himself and ESK, and is willing to go to any length to thwart Corbett's conventional business approach to the blackmail plot.

Klein believes the passive American government and scandal-ridden CIA will not help ESK fight the blackmail, so he decides to build his own world wide security network for the protection and expansion of ESK.

The story progresses toward a meeting between Asian leaders and ESK officials. The other Asian countries are considering following the South Korean lead in demanding more money from ESK and other conglomerates.

Corbett's struggle to clean his name and stop Klein's scheme to crush Asian opposition climaxes in a confrontation in the master computer room of the ESK Tokyo headquarters. It is there that Corbett must find and unravel Klein's plans before they can be initiated.

Author Duncan brings a new sophistication to the suspense/intrigue novel. There is little violence, a welcome change from most current works. The plot easily holds the reader's interest without having to fall back on gore to spice things up.

But the book is by no means devoid of action. That action, however, comes when it is least expected, thus heightening its effect.

The story builds on itself. Details throughout the novel come together at the climax.

The final chapters bring several unexpected twists to the story, and Duncan keeps the reader learning and guessing with Corbett to unravel Klein's intentions.

The book is not without romantic moments, too. The reader follows Corbett from the company president's mistress to a brash, tough-minded company stewardess on whom Corbett must rely for his survival.

Ancient Asian cultures placed dogs at the entrances to their temples to ward off evil. Today's "Temple Dogs" are involved in an entirely new kind of evil. As third world governments begin to strike at multi-national corporations, the ideas in this book become very plausible.

"Temple Dogs" concerns a story seen only on the surface in today's world. But the struggle to maintain strength in the third world could well be a reality, and "Temple Dogs" might be more accurate than many would care to admit.

Week ends with a few bars of "That Old Gang of Mine."

LEO (July 23-August 22): Step out to the beat of a different drummer, Leo — it's playing and you need only lift your noble mane out of the hammock long enough to hear. Partner has closed gates to old beaten path so you must look for a new way to go. If possible, fly united.

VIRGO (August 23-September 22): Your beauty and charm are surpassed only by your occasional lack of tact, Virg. A slip of that lovely lip has someone boiling. Remove foot and make amends. Mending a few fences CAN make good neighbors. On last day of week take a swing on the garden gate.

LIBRA (September 23-October 22): After much steady plodding, you have finally stumbled onto some adventure, Lib. You become intensely interested in a person who is full of whimsey, magic and a bit of the blarney stone. Enjoy just enough of this intrigue to have a few beautiful memories. Remember, fascination with the flame has done in many a good moth, my friend.

SCORPIO (October 23-November 21): You are always one to be on the go, Scorp, but there's just no sense to this recent round of "ripping and tearing." It's time to come in for an emergency landing. When smoke clears, attend to minor disasters brewing on home front. Play comfy homebody for rest of week. You will be rewarded on last day, not amply . . . but enough . . . enough!

SAGITTARIUS (November 22-December 21): Retreat is often not only the best policy, it is the ONLY policy. To the rear march, Saj, and on the double. Nothing will be gained by venturing further or voicing any more loud opinions. A mind is made up against you and anything you do is more grist for the mill.

CAPRICORN (December 22-January 19): That whistling you hear isn't "Dixie", Cap, it's the wheezy breath of Father Time reminding you to keep on taking care of business. As much as you hate to be rushed, you are going to have to keep up with your obligations. Now come on, you have already stopped and smelled the roses, it's time for a little grindstone detail.

AQUARIUS (January 20-February 18): Sometimes you are not only pound foolish, Aquari, you are penny foolish. Why buy two when one will do? Your cupboard is far from bare so fatten up your savings a bit. Week ends with the "clinking" of pennies, dimes and bicentennial quarters into your piggy bank.

PISCES (February 19-March 20): The superior person needs no defense, Pisces. Do not try to justify any of your actions with words. Even your most ardent critics will eventually be silenced by observing your gentle and consistently good nature. Seek comfort and cheer from one close at hand.

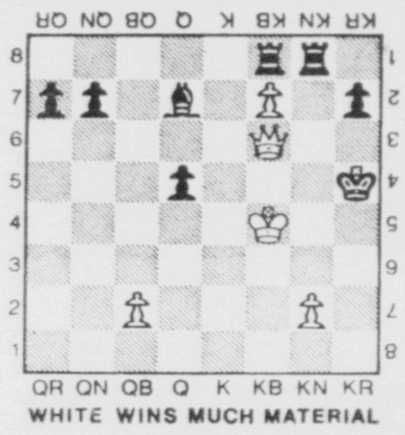
BEGINNER'S CORNER — Hint and explanation: Underpromotion is the key!

BEGINNER'S CORNER



WHITE WINS MUCH MATERIAL

An apparent first is taking place at Dean Junior College, Franklin, Mass.

Beginning in the fall of 1978, Dean will offer a four-course ten-credit "minor" in chess. The concentrated program will provide 450 contact hours between students and chess experts Alan Savage and Marvin Schwartz. The latter are dedicated and innovating teachers who will work intensely with individual students.

Additional lectures and workshops will be given by various other chess masters and experts drawn especially from the greater Boston area. Tournament and match participation on campus, in Boston, and nationally will be encouraged.

The program is the brainchild of Dr. Peter Sakinnen, chairman of the Dean math/science department. According to Sakinnen, "after months of research and communicating with chess instructors and players throughout the country. I determined that such a program would be of significant value and appeal. Chess encourages the highest level of judgmental and analytical skill."

Inquiries should be made to Chess Studies, Dean Junior College, Franklin, Mass. 02038.

ANOTHER KARPOV CRUSH

Another victory by World Champion Anatoly Karpov is given below. The game from the recent Las Palmas tournament in which Karpov scored 12 wins and 3 draws (!) shows a typical Karpov build-up followed by a concentrated ripping attack.

Larsen was second (11 points), Timman third (10 points) and Browne, Tal and Hernandez (9 points) were tied for the next three places in the same tournament.

Stamp notes

The United States 13-cent commemorative stamp marking the 50th anniversary of the completion of the Peace Bridge linking Canada and this country will be issued Aug. 4 at Buffalo, N.Y. Release of Canada's commemorative adhesive will come at the same time in joint first day ceremonies to be held at Kleinhans Music Hall on Symphony Circle in Buffalo.

The U.S.-Canadian border is the longest unguarded border in the history of the world and the bridge represents more than 150 years of peaceful relations between the two countries.

The U.S. Peace Bridge adhesive in a single color engraved stamp printed by intaglio with 50 stamps to the pane and one plate number. It features a symbolic dove superimposed above the outline of the bridge, a design based on a wood-cut by Bernard Brussel-Smith of Bedford Hills, N.J.

Collectors desiring first day cancellations may send self-addressed covers with the Peace Bridge stamp affixed to "First Day Cancellations, Postmaster, Buffalo, N.Y. 14240" not later than Aug. 19.

Collectors who wish the Postal Service to affix the stamps to their self-addressed covers should pencil in lightly in the upper right hand corner how many stamps they wish (single, block of four) and mail the covers to "Peace Bridge Stamp, Postmaster Buffalo, N.Y. 14240" enclosing the proper remittance, which is the cost of the stamps ordered. Requests must be postmarked by Aug. 19.

To obtain the Canadian 12-cent Peace Bridge stamp, send your self-addressed covers to "FDC/Peace Bridge Stamp, Philatelic Service, Canada Post, Ottawa, Ontario, Canada K1A OB5" enclosing the proper remittance, which is the cost of the stamps to be affixed plus a 15-cent handling fee for each cover affixed with less than 50-cents postage. Your remittance for the Canadian stamp must be international bank draft payable to the "Receiver General for Canada."

James Brolin shuns TV for feature film

by Vernon Scott

Not since Steve McQueen and Clint Eastwood climbed out of the quagmire of episodic television has a major movie star evolved from the tube. James Brolin is determined to change all that.

The darkly handsome Brolin is off to a better start than most.

During his six-year tenure in "Marcus Weby, MD," Brolin played starring roles in "Skyjacked," "Westworld," and "Gable and Lombard." Since the series' demise he has top lined "The Car" and "Capricorn I."

Other television leading men have had a shot at feature films only to sink back into the morass of TV. Some can switch back and forth from big screen to little screen without suffering, i.e. Jason Robards and Ernest Borgnine.

But superstardom is built on breaking into movies and staying in them.

Eastwood spent several years playing Rowdy Yates in "Rawhide," then lit out for Italy and spaghetti westerns to establish himself as one of the world's top movie stars.

McQueen gave only a season or so to his role as Josh Randall in "Wanted: Dead or Alive," before bailing out to storm the movies.

Neither has been back to the television tube since.

"I'm determined to follow the same route," said Brolin. "And I keep saying I won't go back to television. I'd rather open a chain of hamburger stands than appear in another series.

"I don't want to work in a medium where the profits are known in advance. Going in, the producer has a certain profit built in and he begins to cut the budget to fatten his own take at the cost of quality in the product.

"And face it, the movies is why everybody comes to this town. They're the major leagues. If you settle for television, you settle for less.

"There's a certain amount of financial security in TV. But that's not what most of us are looking for. We want to hit the jackpot and the best way to do that is on the big screen."

Brolin dreams big. He was offered a million dollars by Universal if he'd stay in "Welby" another year and then accept one of another three series the studio had in mind for him. His answer was no.

He made one concession in bailing out of "Welby." In order to escape another year with the show he gave Universal first option if he decided on another episodic TV series within two years of leaving "Welby."

With that agreement the studio converted his contract to one picture a year for the next four years — at Brolin's option. That means he is free to choose the properties. Also if Universal fails to come up with at least one good movie a year for him, Brolin can opt out.

"I think another television series would have ended my career," he said.

"An actor's face is like a tire with only so much tread. If the tread wears thin, the public backs away and you never regain what you've lost.

"The people I admire most are Bob Redford, Paul Newman and Dustin Hoffman. They never go on talk shows to sell their pictures. The only time the public sees them is to pay $3 to see their movies. That's a classy way to operate.

"It may be tough for me to make that breakthrough because I've been exploited by touring the country every year to promote the 'Welby' series.

"I just hope I'm not too closely identified with my role as Dr. Steve Kiley. Nobody thinks of McQueen as Randall or Eastwood as Yates after all these years.

"But neither one of them was ever in a top-rated show like 'Welby.' They didn't have 65 million people tuned in every week.

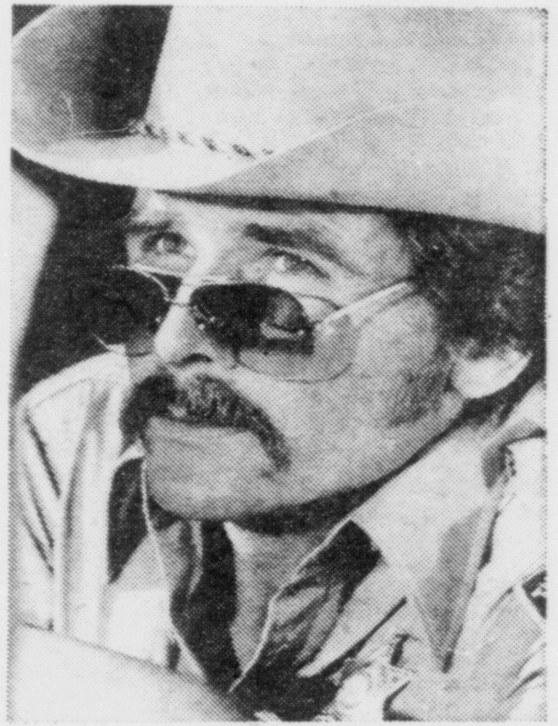
"McQueen did it the easy way. He walked away from his series one day without even hiring a lawyer. He just said 'This is it,' and took off. It was the smartest thing he ever did."

Not only does Brolin hope to establish himself as a major movie star, he plans to imitate the Eastwood-McQueen pattern of making independent films.

He's already formed a production company and is searching for the right properties.

"I have contacts so that I could crank up a movie in two weeks if I had to," he said. "I'm ready to start out on my own.

"You have to be in a position to grab a valuable property and run with it. Up to now I've been controlled by Universal and I still have four pictures to do for them."



James Brolin is determined to break out of episodic television and become a major movie star. He would rather open up a hamburger stand than go on a television series again.

Brolin is confident he can cut it on the big screen and, at least for the moment, he is sincere in his refusal to consider doing anything for television.

Would you tell me if Richard Pryor will soon have his own TV show?

S.B.

Indeed he will. Richard (who has appeared in the films "Car Wash" and "Silver Streak," to name a couple) has signed a contract with NBC. He will not only have his own show premiering this fall, but will also appear on a few TV specials throughout the season.

Lance Kerwin sure is a doll, but we don't know anything about him at all! So please, could you say a little more about this person we just adore?

T.L.M.

He was born in Newport Beach, Calif., on November 6, 1960, the youngest of five boys. Both of his parents are professional performers. While Lance's interest in acting started around age 8 (when he began reading plays and acting them out at home with his parents), Lance credits his recent success in part to a letter he wrote Clint Eastwood listing his talents, saying "If you ever need a kid like me, just give me a call." Eastwood never answered but director Ted Post did.

Lance's television credits include appearances in two ABC Afterschool Specials, "Little House on the Prairie," "Gunsmoke." And he portrays Ramey Holvak in "The Family Holvak."

Hein-Stavros tie told in lawsuit

Story written by Lynn Asinof with research by Toni Ginnetti and Linda Punch.

Former Wheeling Police Chief Peter Guttilla was hand-picked for that top law enofrcement job in 1972 in a clandestine meeting with Village Pres. William Hein and convicted extortionist James Stavros.

Guttilla's testimony in a deposition filed in U.S. District court this week is the first direct link tying Hein, then a trustee, with political strongman Stavros.

The testimony shows that Hein helped Stavros fill at least one key village post at a time when the local government was riddled with corruption.

Hein, who repeatedly has denied political connections with Stavros, Friday refused to comment, saying the matter is in court. "I don't want anything to jeopardize the case," he said of Guttilla's suit to get his old job back.

HEIN'S CONNECTION WITH Stavros has continued to be a political issue in Wheeling. Stavros appeared at Hein's victory party after Hein's slate swept the April village election. His opponents on the board also have charged that Hein has been seen meeting with Stavros at the Hein family auto parts store. Hein consistently has denied these charges.

Guttilla testified that Stavros arranged a meeting with Hein and two other village officials in May 1972, a the old Hartmann House restaurant, 393 S. Milwaukee Ave.

One of those attending the meeting was the late village Trustee Michael Valenza, who was convicted with Stavros in 1974 in building and zoning scandal. Guttilla said he could not remember the third official.

Stavros, former Wheeling Township Democratic committeeman, had no official position in the village. During his sentencing, however, he admitted that he controlled village building and zoning policies, allowing him to shakedown numerous builders.

Describing Hein as "the aggressor in the conversation," Guttilla said Hein and Valenza offered him the police chief's job. Guttilla said he was not interested in the post until the two promised him a four-year contract, an $18,000 annual salary and a substantial raise in the future.

ALTHOUGH STAVROS arranged the initial meeting, he was not included in a subsequent meeting.

"Jim kind of made the initial introduction and then backed away from everything and left it to the trustees," Guttilla said.

The police chief's post was open because chief M. O. Horcher suffered a stroke and was placed on disability. Guttilla became acting chief and captain in June 1972, hired by then Village Mgr. George Passolt. Horcher became an administrative assistant.

Three years later, Horcher was judged fit to resume his post and ousted Guttilla, who promptly filed suit. Guttilla still is unemployed.

IN HIS DEPOSITION, filed in connection with his suit, Guttilla also admitted that Stavros politically sponsored him for two earlier jobs. One job was as an investigator for Cook County Board Pres. Seymour Simon from 1964-66. The second job in early 1968 was as an investigator for then Illinois Sec. of State Paul Powell.

Describing his hiring, Guttilla said there were a total of three meetings, the first arranged by a phone call from Stavros.

Guttilla said he arrived at the restaurant and Stavros introduced him to Valenza, Hein and the third official. "Then he left the saloon," he said of Stavros. "He left me alone with the

More secret drugging told by the CIA

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The CIA Friday disclosed it had arranged the secret drugging of more American citizens in the cold war era than it previously admitted to Congress.

White House Press Sec. Jody Powell said CIA Director Stansfield Turner had unearthed documents concerning the druggings in the period from 1953-1964, and passed the information both to the White House and Sen. Daniel K. Inouye, D-Hawaii, chairman of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence.

Powell said the CIA did not know of any deaths in the series of experiments, which he said were discontinued more than 10 years ago.

ACCORDING TO testimony to the Senate Intelligence Committee in 1975, an Army biochemist committed suicide after being fed LSD in a series of CIA-Army experiments which also involved prison "volunteers" and inmates at the Lexington, Ky., center for narcotic addicts in the 1950s.

Powell said the new documents found by Turner revealed some persons chosen for experimentation under the so-called "MK-ULTRA" program were drug addicts or alcoholics, and there was research on surreptitious methods of administering drugs.

According to previous disclosures, Frank Olson leaped out a New York hotel window in 1953 in a suicide plunge while under the influence of drugs secretly administered by the CIA.

"So far as I know, the CIA doesn't know" of any deaths in the cases disclosed Friday, Powell said.

TURNER SAID the new material was "primarily of a financial nature." He said there wre these types of activities:

- Possible additional cases of drugs being tested on American citizens without their knowledge.
- Research was undertaken on surreptitious methods of administering drugs.
- Some of the persons chosen for erxperimentation were drug addicts or alcoholics.
- Research into the development of a knockout or 'K' drug was performed in conjunction with work done to develop painkillers for advanced cancer patients, and tests on such patients were carried out.
- There is a possibility of an improper payment to a private institution."

DR. ZYGMUNT BEJNAROWICZ, a Park Ridge dental surgeon, faces a legal battle in Cook County Divorce Court to maintain custody of his son Wojciech. Bejnarowicz engineered a cloak-and- dagger type mission that took 5½ years before he found his son, who was taken to England during divorce and custody hearings in Chicago in 1971.

Dist. 207 dropout rate blamed on job market

Most students who dropped out of Maine Township Dist. 207 high schools during 1976-77 did so because they lost interest or wanted to work full-time.

Statistics released by school officials showed a total of 278 out of 11,626 students withdrew from school this year, compared to 181 last year.

The drop-out rate increased to the normal 2.3 per cent this year, after an unusual plunge to 1.5 per cent last year.

SCHOOL OFFICIALS blamed the apparent increase mostly on the method used last year on a trial basis to compute student withdrawls. Those students planning to attend night school were not included in the 1975-76 statistics, so they were deceptively low.

However, an increase in both the numbers withdrawn because of full-time employment and lack of interest probably is due to the favorable job market, Thomas Paulsen, Dist. 207 administrative assistant, said.

"It's the general trend," Paulsen said. "In '74 and '75, the job market was very bad. But now there are more jobs available. So the number withdrawn for employment reasons is up."

Of the 278 who withdrew from school, 103 did so for employment reasons. Last year 77 dropped out to go to work.

THOSE WHO withdrew stating "lack of interest" as the cause numbered 114, compared to 79 in 1975-76.

Many of those in the "lack of interest" category may have withdrawn in

Tug o' war with child's life

Since last November 6-year-old Wojciech Bejnarowicz has been discovering what it is like to be a normal, middle class child in the United States.

He goes to school. He plays with neighbor children in a small pool in back of his northwest Chicago home. He takes swimming lessons at the YMCA. He listens to bedtime stories from his father.

It is a childhood that Wojciech was sheltered from for 5½ years, until his father, Dr. Zygmunt Bejnarowicz, last November snatched him from his mother's side as she walked down a street in London, England.

"HE WASN'T AT school, he hadn't been around any children," said Bejnarowicz, 45, a Park Ridge dental surgeon. "He wanted to be in their company but he didn't know how to start it. She (his mother) hadn't sent him to school because she was afraid we would find him."

Bejnarowicz is worried that the incredible 5½ year search and kidnaping of his son, which included the hiring of four detectives and cost $30,000, may not have been enough to rejoin him permanently with Wojciech.

The boy's mother, who defied a Chicago court order when she fled with the boy to England in 1971, is waging what Bejnarowicz calls "a fierce battle" to regain custody of Wojciech.

BEJNAROWICZ FEARS that his ex-wife's aggressive attorney, a psychologist's report and the fact that courts usually give cus-

North Korea changes tone on copter incident

Waiting begins for mom of surviving copter copilot

A Herald staff report

Glenn Schwanke's grandfather was 80 years old Friday and the family planned a celebration. But the plans changed suddenly in the afternoon when Glenn's mother, of Spring Green, Wis., learned he was the lone survivor from the crew of a U.S. helicopter shot down Thursday morning over North Korea.

"She'll probably just stay at home and hope for a call from the Pentagon saying her son has been released," Mrs. Nonnie Parkins, a family friend, said Friday.

Schwanke's mother learned the fate of her son about 4:30 p.m. Friday when she called Jody Powell, President Carter's press secretary.

THE SCHWANKE family and friends, however, still are concerned because they don't know the condition of Glenn, 28. The North Koreans have said he is injured but won't say how badly. Schwanke, a chief warrant officer, was the copilot of the helicopter that reportedly strayed over into North Korea before it was shot down.

Mrs. Parkins said a White House reporter was the first person to give Mrs. Schwanke the news. Not believing the reporter, she called Powell who confirmed the news.

Schwanke's father and mother are divorced. His father, who lives in nearby Loganville, has no telephone, friends say, and they were uncertain whether he knew about his son.

Pentagon officials were hoping Schwanke would be released and the bodies of the other three crewmen returned.

SCHWANKE'S AUNT, Catherine Schwanke, said she remembers he was shot down while piloting a helicopter in Vietnam. She said he may have been shot down as many as three times while on a tour of duty there.

"When I heard he had been shot down, I thought to myself that he'll know just what to do," Mrs. Schwanke said.

"I really don't think this will affect Glenn," she said. "He'll probably take it all right in stride. He is very level-headed."

Friends said Mrs. Schwanke has held up well throughout the incident.

Schwanke, who visited his family last November when he came home to go deer hunting, had just reenlisted before he was sent to Korea.

He has been in the service nine years and had been training helicopter pilots at a base in Texas before being sent to Korea.

While in Texas he met his wife who went to Korea with him in April.

Karen Krempetz, 16, of Palatine.

Personality counts

Karen Krempetz and the 11 other girls all entered the Illinois Miss U.S. Teen Pageant for the same reason: it sounded like fun

by JOHN LAMPINEN

Karen Krempetz first started watching the Miss America and the Miss Universe and all of the other pageants when she was 5.

She loved them. She was fascinated by them.

And after they were over, she would go to bed and sit up and dream little-girl dreams of being named Miss U.S.A.

She is 16 now, a red-haired, light-complexioned senior at Fremd High School in Palatine, and Friday afternoon, she was a part of the hectic activity at the Sheraton-Walden Inn in Schaumburg.

MISS KREMPETZ and nine other girls, including Natalie Gong of Elk Grove Village, were registering for the Illinois Miss US. Teen Pageant at the hotel this weekend.

She decided to get involved in the pageant, she said, because it sounded like fun. It is the reason given by most of the contestants.

"I decided it would be a lot of fun," she said. "It was just, I don't know, I just thought it would be a lot of fun."

Later, she pointed out that her curiosity about all of the pageants that run on television also may have had something to do with it.

"I'm doing it for the experience," she said. "You know, you watch pageants on TV and you never know what's going on behind the scenes."

FROM HER introduction Friday, it is very much like what happens on the screen.

The contestants are white-teethed, slender, most with clear complexions and nice tans who giggle and exchange incredulous girl talk like "You didn't pack your suitcase until this morning: Neither did I!"

They all say that they decided to enter because, as Cathi Palmer of Elgin put it, "I thought it would be fun because it would be an opportunity to meet people and I love people."

They sit politely and listen as Zettia Pierce, the director of the pageant, comes into the room to tell them in a Scout-mother voice that the room numbers for the judges have been changed, concluding, "OK? See you, girls."

They entered the contest by responding to small newspaper items. As a result of their inquiries, they received applications asking for information on their hobbies and outside activities.

THOSE ARE important questions in this contest, said Harry Rosenbloom, who was registering the girls Friday morning. After all, that's what it's all about.

"This is not a beatuy contest," he said. "It's their community activity with the church. It's not a bathing suit contest. It's how they conduct themselves, how they carry themselves when they're modeling."

Although the Miss U.S. Teen Pageant has run nationally for eight years, this is the first year Illinois has been involved in a semifinal competition. In some ways, it shows.

Mrs. Pierce said the hotel in Schaumburg was selected as the site because Elgin, where she lives, does not have a Sheraton.

There was no screening of the candidates. About 30 throughout the state mailed in inquiries in response to the newspaper articles. After they were sent applications, eleven returned them. They were all expected to be in this weekend's pageant, but one couldn't make it because she came down with the flu.

BUT MISS KREMPETZ was always determined to get there, even though she wasn't sure she could get time off from her part-time job.

She came up with the $75 fee to enter on her own, without help from her family or a sponsor, which is the route taken by many of the contestants.

If anything, she said, it gets back to her long obsession with the Miss U.S.A., Miss America, Miss Universe, Miss Teen-Age America pageants.

"I don't know why that used to fascinate me, but it always did," she said.

Miss U.S.A. was always her favorite because she doesn't like to sit through all the "talent" exhibitions, Miss Krempetz said. But there was one Miss U.S.A. she didn't like. The winner later complained that all the time taken up with being Miss US.A. was taking away from time she could spend on dates.

"SHE SAID, 'They control my whole life,' " Miss Krempetz recalled. "She had a wrong attitude."

Meanwhile, she admitted headily that as a little girl she had always wanted to be Miss U.S.A.

Somebody asked if she still has that dream, and she hesitated. It is not a dream teen-age girls advertise. Finally, she began to speak softly.

"Deep down," she said, "I've always wanted to."

Grants sought to examine formation of new city

The mayors of Des Plaines, Niles and Park Ridge are seeking grants for both the state and federal governments to study formation of a city in unincorporated east Maine Township.

Supporting the incorporation efforts are Herbert H. Volberding, mayor of Des Plaines; Nicholas B. Blase, mayor of Niles; and Martin J. Butler, mayor of Park Ridge. All three communities border on the unincorporated Maine Township area bounded by Dempster Street on the south, Central Road on the north, the Tri-State Tollway on the west and Greenwood Avenue on the east.

The mayors are requesting $25,000 from both the state and federal governments to fund studies of the area's problems and whether its tax base could support a municipality. The funding requests have been made through Rep. Abner J. Mikva, D-10th, and the Illinois Dept. of Local Government Affairs.

MORE THAN 25,000 persons live in the unincorporated area which has been plagued with traffic, building code, and health and safety problems for years. Some residents of the area have been attempting to bring about incorporation, but little progress has been made.

Blase said the three mayors are getting involved partially because there seems to be limited effort to form a city.

"We're attacking this from both the state and federal government to see what we can get," he said. "Part of the reason for this seems to be a lack of interest in the area for incorporation."

Blase and the other mayors said deterioration of the unincorporated area will ultimately hurt the municipalities which border it.

"THE MAYORS are well aware that further deterioration of the unincorporated area will not only affect people living there, but will affect the communities around it, such as Des Plaines, Niles and Park Ridge," the three said in a joint statement this week.

Annexation of the area as a solution to its problems was discussed last year. However, bordering communities concluded that incorporation of east Maine Township was the best solution.

"Annexation was talked about at one time," said Volberding. "But nobody could agree who would get what problems."

Volberding said incorporation is a "wonderful" idea which should be supported by all.

"I see it as more localized control than the county has to offer," he said.

Dropout rate returns to normal anticipation of finding jobs, Paulsen said.

"A kid could want a job. He sees the job market, it looks good. He says I don't have anything, but I'll find something," he said.

Those who withdrew, but planned to attend night school or some other form of continuing education, are represented in all categories this year, but most under "other," Paulsen said.

THIRTY-THREE students are listed in that category, compared to nine last year. They were not included in any of the statistics last year, because school officials reasoned they were not drop-outs if they planned to continue their education at night school.

However, many who stated plans to attend night school did not do so, Paulsen said. Thus, the withdrawal statistics were too low and Dist. 207 returned to the original method of computing withdrawals.

At 2.3 per cent, Paulsen said the district's withdrawal rate is low compared to most other districts.

"Maine is very fortunate," he said. "The student body in general is made up of highly-motivated, college-bound or vocational students. They see the value of education — they get that from home."
